THE INDEPENDENT

IN MONDAY,

MONDAY 15 JULY 1996

The dying embers of peace

MICHAEL STREETER ALAN MURDOCH and JOJO MOYES

The Northern Irish peace process was close to complete disintegration last night as positions hardened in the wake of the bomb explosion at Enniskillen early yesterday.

With the momentum of events in Northern Ireland headed in the direction of more conflict and bloodshed after an Orange march was first stopped and then allowed

A political wasteland

Most Orangemen clearly believe that they won a great victory last week. Certainly their march got through. Nationalists were humiliated, and Unionism and Orangeism demonstrated real muscle.

But in the process the underlying instability of the state was exposed, the very fabric of society was ripped and damaged, and the most fundamental questions posed about the reformability of

Northern Ireland. It seems hardly credible that a province which last year had the hope of a bright new future could so swiftly be transformed into a political wasteland, its economic prospects dashed, its image defaced, its communal relations in ruins. Even i Ireland the prospects have rarely seemed bleaker. - David McKittrick page 15

through at Drumcree last week, Sir Patrick Mayhew, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, is to make a statement in the Commons this afternoon. The Irish Government requested an emergency meeting this week between John Major and the Taoiseach, John Bruton, but Dublin sources said this had not been agreed by the British Government, which seemed to want time to allow tempers to

The Killyhelvin hotel bomb. the first in Northern Ircland since the 1994 ceasefire, was condemned on almost all sides yesterday, amid fears of a vioent backlash by loyalist para-

But hopes of peace still hung by a slender thread last night as it emerged that the bomb was probably the work of Republican Sinn Fein, a splinter group,

The Sinn Fein president, Gerry Adams, said he was greatly relieved no one was seriously hurt in the attack, which injured 17, and said he was "immensely suspicious" as to who carried it out "at a point when the British Government and Unionist leaders are in the dock". He said that, for them, "this comes at a very fortuitous

He said that when the "real

As nationalist feelings ran high, Roman Catholic outrage over Drumcree was expressed in strong language by Cardinal Cahal Daly: "Por 25 years I have condemned violence from all quarters, but I now feel betrayed - betrayed by the British Gov-ernment," he told GMTV's Sunday programme.

Asked who was responsible for the breakdown of the peace process, he said: Sadly, regrettably, I have to say that I lay the blame fairly and squarely on the British Government." But he appealed tor We must not allow this to happen. We must pull back from that awful brink."

military groups.

rather than the IRA itself.

authors" of the bombing were identified "we will see there were dirty tricks involved".

Despite condemnations of the bomb, the the recriminations over Drumcree also put severe strain on the all-party consensus at Westminster yesterday. Marjorie Mowlam, Labour's spokeswoman, described the decision of the mainly Roman Catholic SDLP to pull out of the peace forum as "understandable". She repeated her demand for an in-

Shattered dreams: Burnt-out cars around the Killyhevlin Hotel in Emiskillen yesterday. The attack has ween London rial talks, and said that talks security co-operation and con-

dependent commission to look at parades and marches, and said it was "really serious" that the "rule of law had been brushed aside" by the decision to let the Orange march at

Drumcree to go ahead. Lord Holme, for the Liberal Democrats, accused British ministers of being implicated in the "disastrous" reversal of policy at Drumcree. He asked: "How could they not have planned ahead for the marches after Drumcree last year?"

and Dublin have hit a new low, with Mr Major reportedly "incandescent" at Mr Bruton's criticisms of the British Government's handling of Drum-cree and the Irish foreign minister, Dick Spring, admitting that "very wide gaps" had appeared between the two governments which would now be 'extremely difficult" to resolve. A Downing Street spokeswoman had no comment on the Irish request for prime minste-would be "at the level of Sir Patrick and Mr Spring" in the two Governments in recent course of all-party talks starting tomorrow. Yesterday Mr Spring main-tained the blunt criticism of the about-turn over Drumcree, saying British decisions regarding one community had signally failed to judge the effect on the nationalist side, and had simply "revisited mistakes of the past".

He complained that effective sulted on policing decisions in years had not been forthcoming in the last week.

This provoked a furious reaction from the arch-unionist wing of the Conservative party. David Wilshire, Tory MP for Spelthorne, told the Independent: The time has come to tear up the Anglo-Irish Agreement." He said the Irish Government was not "entitled to be con-

British Government had "got to square up to terrorists rather than appease them". Meanwhile, Mr Adams, speaking on Irish radio, said the British Government had to be "straightened out" following the Drumcree U-turn. "They have to have manners put on them" to enable meaningful all-party talks to become a possībility, he said.

On the other side of the sec-to breaking. Gary McMichael. leader of the Ulster Democratic Party - which has an ear to the thinking of the Ulster Freedom Fighters - warned that the ceasefire was at "breaking point". He said: "Every time there is a republican action in Northern Ireland it gets worse.

I think we have probably reached a watershed. Town shattered, page 2

If you see Sid, tell him he's been conned

PATRICK TOOHER

The former chairman of British Gas who steered the company to a flagship privatisation a decade ago claims millions of inestors were "conned" into buying the shares.

The outspoken remarks by Sir Dennis Rooke effectively bury the dream of popular capitalism that was born with the creation of "Sid", the archetypal private investor invented to promote the sale of British Gas

His comments are even more significant, coming on the day that the government's controversial privatisation of the energy industry, which began with British Gas, is completed when shares in nuclear generator Births Energy begin trading on the London Stock Exchange.

Sir Dennis, who ran British Gas from 1976 to 1989, argues that the terms under which the company was sold to investors ten years ago, including authorisation as the sole supplier of gas to domestic customers in the UK, have changed since privatisation, leaving shareholders feeling cheated.

"Over the years 'Sid' certainly has been conned ... There's not Sen been any real explanation." he says in a BBC television interview for tonight's Nine O'Clock News.

"What is happening is the kind of mess I thought we were. going to get into. It happens to be much greater, and faster, than I'd expected." Last night Labour's shadow energy minister John Battle joined in Sir Dennis' condemnation of the privatisation process... "Investors are increasingly disillusioned," he said. "It is not quite the dream of shareholding democracy we were promised, and most shareholders have sold their shares to the institutions. "There is dangerous evidence of the energy market unravelling and it is significant that Tim Eggar [the energy minister who is leaving Parliament] is walking away from it.

Sir Dennis' outburst comes at a highly sensitive time for British Gas. It is in the throes of breaking itself up into two separate companies and is locked in negotiations with the industry regulator Ofgas about proposals to impose price controls on its international pipeline business that could see its profits halved.

It also faces the introduction of domestic competition in 1998. Rival suppliers can already ply for trade in south-west England, where half a million households can buy gas from a variety of companies. So far about 10 per cent of customers have switched from British Gas to new suppliers.
Uncertainty about the future of British Gas has weighed heavily on its share price, and the Sids who bought in at 135p a share ten years ago have had a poor return.

Having reached a high of 350p two years ago, the shares now trade at 189p, a rise of just 40 per cent.

Over the same period, anyone buying the index of Britain's top 100 companies would easily have doubled their money by showing a capital return of 164 per cent.

Business, page 18

Gadaffi's rivals pay ultimate penalty

ANDREW GUMBEL

A rising tide of resentment against the Libyan leader, Colonel Muammar Gadaffi, has exploded into violence at a football stadium in Tripoli, where a derby between the capital's two main teams turned into a shoot-out between supporters and official government bodyguards. Up to 50 people were yesterday reported to have been killed in one of the worst outbreaks of violence to hit Libya in years, as the crowd embarked on a shouting match for and against Mr Gadaffi which degenerated into bloodshed. The crucial moment came in the closing moments of the game, as the referee was forced to adjudicate a questionable goal scored by Al-Ahli over their city rival, Al-Ittihad. The crowd clearly felt the goal should have been disallowed, but Al-Ahli's owner - Mr Gadaffi's son al-Saadi - was sitting in the stands and the referee eventually decided to let it stand. Furious Al-Ittihad supporters immediately invaded the pitch chanting anti-government slogans, andal-Saadi's bodyguards opened fire in response, killing at least four people. Some sup-

Power kicks: al-Saadi, son of Libya's Colonel Gadaffi

stampeded towards the exits. Once outside, the violence resumed. Cars and passers-by were attacked with stones, seemingly at random. Estimates by foreign diplomats and Libyan opposition leaders put the final death toll at between 20 and 50, with scores of others injured.

The game took place last Tuesday, and for several days the government succeeded in hushing up the incident. But by this weekend even the official porters started firing back, but media were giving a sanitised panic quickly gripped the 60,000-strong crowd, which version over the airwaves, and tional day of mourning. Restaurants and hotels were banned from holding large receptions, and state television transmitted all its programmes in black and All league games have been suspended for 40 days, and the two Tripoli teams involved in the game have been disbanded, according to official sources. The affair is likely to have badly shaken Colonel Gadaffi, since public opposition to his 27year-old regime is almost un-heard of. There have been growing challenges to his authority, notably from Islamic fundamentalists, but they have largely been confined to Libya's second city, Benghazi, in the east, and have rarely manifested themselves in Tripoli.

Libyan opposition groups have reported several violent incidents recently, including a prison riot last week in which eight political prisoners on hunger strike were shot dead.

On the Egyptian border, armed guards have been stopping and searching trucks comng into the country, apparently searching for weapons. Col Gadaffi has ordered that any known fundamentalist leaders should be shot on sight, and scores of suspected opponents of the regime have been forced out of business or arrested.

The flexible acts like a deposit and personal loan facility, for directors and the self employed -all at mortgage rate!

The Moneysense Mortgage Account™ is a revolutionary concept in comprehensive mortgage and personal finance management. It positively personal finance management. It posters a encourages mortgage repayment, makes ser finance management. further borrowing simpler and cheaper and makes excellent use of spare funds paid into the account (with the guarantee of return of those funds at any time).

In most cases, details of income will not be required when applying for a Moneysense Mortgage Account 1th.

The scheme is available for purchases and re-mortgages and for any legal capital-raising purpose. Your home is at risk if you do not keep up repayments on a mortgage or other loan secured on it. Suitable security and adequate life cover may be required by the lender. Full written quotation and brochure on request.

Contact the Mortgage Desk at Freedman & Co. Tel: 01727 836511 (24 Hours) Fax: 01727 840976

the Procuracy Approximentally. What there were a section of the operation of the section of the (3) A Procession Registration with the median antique registration of the soft was a function of the soft and the soft

For the life you don't yet know

QUICKLY

Theme park danger BBC denies conflict Britons have been working with hazardous chemicals, without The BBC has denied a conflict of interests in the case of its adequate protection, on Eudirector of comedy, a major rope's biggest movie theme shareholder in a leading comedy programme produc-

Olive Tree wilts

The post-election honeymoon has ended for Italy's rusing left. Ch wing coalities, with the main partner, the PDS, spit ever its LE park, an Independent investiga-

CONTENTS

NEED?
LEFE SS
RK ADHO
ER

The c

the c.

row i have step (

at tí

howe

for tl plot.

do v

aton

this (

The

chan to de Will er te Fort

spec achi

expe a mi

tean

givii lene anc leve

this race swe

agai alor

or ti

yeai Sch

proi

and ty w bey

Sch

العن wer

traj

rou

w.pr

this t i h

GF

ΑL

Br

Ar

Eι

M

Sį

After Enniskillen: Bomb brought back the horror of Remembrance Day slaughter in 1987

Town shattered by memories

MICHAEL STREETER

The 1200lb bomb which ripped apart a hotel in Enniskillen was two minutes away from claiming "many lives" police said yesterday.

Speaking after a weekend of savage disorder throughout the province, the RUC chief constable Sir Hugh Annesley condemned the blast as 'evil. cowardly and a wanton attack".

The crucial question of who planted the device, near the scene of the 1987 bomb which killed 11 people at a Remembrance Day parade, was still un-clear. The IRA denied responsibility, while security sources in Dublin said it was the work of the breakaway faction. Republican Sinn Fein.

What they said

Turbett, after the wedding reception of nurses Thadeus Turbett and Martina Mc-

Manus, was ended by the bomb that blew up the Enniskillen Killy Helvin Hotel.

"When you see (DUP leader)

Mr Paisley and others saying that they are winners this week that makes me very fearful because, if we're going to sort out the problem in Northern Ireland, there can be no winners and no losers."

"Sadly, regrettably I have to say that I lay the blame fairly and squarely on the British Government, I regret to have to say that, but it is the truth." Cardinal Cahal Daly,

Roman Catholic Primate of

"There's only so much that one can argue, and the argument about the maintenance of the moral high ground for loyalism, I'm afraid, is wearing somewhat thin." David Ervine, of the

.*I do hope they will keep their ceasefire in being and with all the conviction I can muster I would ask them to do so. The consequences of not doing so would be to return us all to the hell whence we came." Sir Hugh An-nesley, head of the RUC.

The forum was supposed to be there to build understanding and build reconcil-lation. It wasn't doing that It's doing ouite the opposite.

SDLP leader John Hume.

"We have a situation of to-

IMPROVED PRICES

FROM

JULY 21996

* easy instant connection

operators are standing by 24hrs a day,7 days a week

These prices and this new service are not available until July 24th 1996.

Current prices are slightly higher and there is a connection cost to our London exchange charged at your normal carmer's rates.

🛊 fantastic global rates

tal lawlessness here."

Sinn Fein's chairman,

Mitchel McLaughlin.

Progressive Unionists.

All Ireland.

"What a terrible way to start married life, groom's cousin Eamonn

Sir Hugh was non-committal about reports that one of the two 20-minute warnings before the explosion mentioned the IRA. The calls were made to the Killyhevlin hotel itself and a Catholic priest, and contained no recognised code words. The IRA also usually phones its warnings to media organisa-tions. One clue to those responsible is that the vehicle which contained the bomb was stolen in Dublin on 3 July.

Detectives said it was too early to say whether the bomb, made of home made explosives, and left in a grey Isuzu Trooper jeep parked seven feet from the hotel entrance, bore the hallmarks of any particular terrorist group.

The explosion, just after midnight, blew away the entire front section of the building, leaving a 12-foot wide crater and destroying nine parked cars.

The last of the more than 200 hotel guests, including people attending a Catholic wedding reception and two pregnant women, were evacuated across fields just two minutes before it detonated.

Declan McGovern, a hotel worker, said: "We got a phone call to say there was a bomb at the front of the hotel. We had a wedding party and I got hold of the microphone from the band and told everyone what had happened and asked them to leave quickly and without

Many of those who fled still wore their night clothes and the blast was heard up to ten miles got out in time, it was very frightening." A newly wed couple, Martina McManus and Thaddeus Turbett, were among 17 people taken to hospital where three were later detained suffering from shock.

A police spokesman said: "Had the bomb gone off two minutes earlier there would have been an incredible loss of life. Hotel owner Rodney Watson, who hopes to reopen part of the hotel this week, said it was "a miracle" no one was badly hurt

Instead of beginning their honeymoon in Tenerife yesterday, the Turbetts were coming to terms with being the first bomb victims in Ulster since the IRA ceasefire began in Sep-

The blast came after escalating scenes of violence in the province, the worst of which occurred in Londonderry over the weekend. Million of pounds of damage was caused to local

Nearly 2,000 petrol bombs were thrown during Thursday and Friday nights, and although only 200 were thrown during further disturbances early yes terday morning police said the ferocity of attacks was still strong and described scenes there as "absolute madness".

But nationalists in the city. who staged a second protest march last night, accused the RUC and the Army of indiscriminate firing of thousands of plastic baton rounds at demonstrators. Local feeling was further inflamed by the death of Catholic factory worker Dermot McShane, 36, who was crushed underneath an armoured vehicie early on Saturday. Belfast also saw outbreaks of violence early yesterday mornbusinesses by petrol bombs in ing in many Catholic areas inthree nights of intense rioting. cluding the Ardoyne and The Markets and at one stage an RUC police station was attacked with petrol bombs. However a nationalist protest of 5,000 people through the Falls Road area passed off peacefully yesterday afternoon.

There were also disturbances in Newry, Downpatrick, Dungiven and Strabane. Ulster Buses said it faced a £5m bill for the destruction of 34 vehicles during the week since the start of the siege of Drumcree in Por-

SIGNIFICANT SHORTS

Atax on all forms of energy will be proposed by the ALiberal Democrats today, maintaining the party's distinctively green stance, despite criticisms that it would hit people on lower incomes. Matthew Taylor, the Liberal Democrat environment spokesman, will restate the party's commitment to a "carbon tax" on all forms of energy which contribute to global warming, caused by the

which contribute to global warming, caused by the accumulation of carbon dioxide in the upper atmosphere. The proceeds of the carbon tax would be used to cut employers' National Insurance contributions, described as a "tax on jobs", and VAT. The Liberal Democrats voted with Labour to defeat the rise in VAT on domestic gas and electricity two years ago, to charges of hypocrisy that their electricity two years ago, to charges of hypocrisy that their carbon tax would have the same effect as the Government's proposal. John Rentoul

Plans to dig up and recycle a waste tip have been drawn up for the first time in Britain. Berkshire County Council is now considering bids from more than 100 companies around the world to begin mining an almost full landfill site for plastics, glass and metals. The tip, near Bracknell, holds household and commercial waste which, for the last 15 mags, has been diversed in a hold to be a companied. for the last 15 years, has been dumped in a hole left by the extraction of sand and gravel.

If the scheme goes ahead, the semi-rotted waste will be dug up and moved to the remaining vacant spaces on site for mechanical sorting. Recyclable materials will be removed and sold and the remaining waste will be shredded, compacted then re-dumped in the same landfill. Nicholas Schoon

American computer programs, which prevent children from accessing pornography and "undesirable information" on the Internet, also bar them from many British sources holding useful or entirely innocent information. Among the British sites which cannot be accessed when using the programs are those for the the accessed when using the programs are those for the the Prison Lexicon (which provides information about penal reform), the computing department of Queen Mary and Westfield College and Telephone Information Services, which offers weather and share reports.

Between them, the programs - such as Cyber Patrol, Netnanny and Cybersitter - prevent access to tens of thousands of sites on the Internet. But they effectively apply an American system of morals - on religion, weapons, drugs, alcohol and sex - to the data which British children might be expected to know about, or could obtain from newspapers. Charles Arthur

A new-look summer drink-drive campaign will be launched this week by the Government – without any television commercials. Although the usual amount of money - £1m - is being spent on the campaign, the message will be driven home by radio and posters.

"The idea is to alert people on their way to the pub who will hear anti-drink messages on the radio and see posters by the roadside," said a Department of Transport spokesman. The campaign, which is aimed primarily at 17 24 year olds, will be launched in London on Tuesday by Transport Minister Steven Norris. The posters will show pictures of the same character who featured in last Christmas's drink-drive TV adverts. He was seen being fed by his mother after being terribly injured after drinking and driving.

One person died when a plane crashed at an air show yesterday. The victim was believed to be the pilot of a P38 Lightning fighter aircraft which crashed into a line of stationary planes while carrying out a low-level fly-past at the Imperial War Museum in Duxford, Cambridgeshire.

Thousands of spectators saw the planes burst into flames. They had gone to the former wartime airfield for a display of vintage aircraft. Firemen put out the blaze and tried in vain to release the pilot from the fighter. The driver of a lorry who was passing the airfield on the A505 driver of a lorry who was passing the airfield on the A505 was reported to be "shaken up but unharmed" after his vehicle was hit by flying debris.

inal-year students are overwhelmingly pro-Labour, according to a survey of 9,153 students at 21 universities, with Oxford and Cambridge exceeded only by Liverpool in their enthusiasm for Tony Blair. Overall, 43 per cent of the students said they intend to vote Labour, a 17-point lead over the Conservatives on 26 per cent, with the Liberal Democrats on 14 per cent. But 73 per cent of students at Liverpool support Labour, as do 56 per cent at both Oxford and Cambridge.

The most pro-Tory universities are Exeter and Southampton, where 40 per cent back John Major, followed by Bath and St Andrews on 35 per cent. The survey was carried out by High Fliers Research during the final week of the spring term. John Rentoul

Twelve winners shared Saturday's £21.9m National Lottery rollover jackpot. Winning numbers were 11, 5, 42, 41, 10 and 12, with the bonus ball 2.

THE INDEPENDENT ABROAD

Belgium BFr80 Raly L4,500 Ar mart, 13 weeks: Europe £110,76; Zone 1 f\(\text{Middle} \)

Camenes Pts300 Madeira . . . Esc325 East, Amenca, Africa end India) £184.08; Zone 2 (Far

Derumanik Dier 18 Norway Nicr 20 cheque payable to Johnson's International Media Senigh

Insh Rep 45p Portugal . . . Esc325 Ltd to 43 Mbihatoou, London E14 9TR or telephone 07

BACK ISSUES

France Fr14 Spern Pts300 538 8288. Credit cards welcome

.....Sch40 NTands R5.00

What would Gordon Wilson have made of this? I think he would have despaired'

WE ARE PROUD TO ANNOUNCE OUR NEW SERVICE AND The people of Enniskillen woke up yesterday to find themselves the centre of world attention for > ry; and for the same grim reason, writes Michael Streeter. A 1200lb bomb which wrecked the Killyhevlin hotel has reopened the scars of 1987. Then, the Remembrance Day massacre of 11 people helped build up momentum for a quest for peace and catapulted Gor-don Wilson, whose daughter Marie died there, into the pub-

the second time in their histo-

The residents of this prosperous Co Fermanagh town

At its annual conference in Dublin last November Republican Sinn Fein (RSF), headed by former Provisional leader move today.

"To the outside world Enniskillen is a one story town that's why these bloody terrorists chose it," said one local Protestant. "It's brought back a lot of painful memories to a town which just wanted to forget."

Tom Moffitt, proudly wearing his Royal British Legion badge, feared the bomb would unleash a loyalist backlash. "If that happens then we will see the 25 years of Troubles all over again." Outside the well ordered En-are not hopeful of a similar the talk was of rising tension in violence in Belfast. He said: the town. "This is not normally a sectarian town, Protestants and Catholics generally get on okay together. But this won't help," said one congregation

> At the Catholic St Michael's church 20 yards away the feeling was equally sombre. One churchgoer said: "We're stunned by what happened and ople don't quite know what to think about it. But nobody will benefit from this." Harry Bradley, 54, and his Outside the well ordered En-niskillen Methodist church, for the weekend to escape the

"We expected to phone home to right there - instead we have just phoned home to say that we are all right." Behind him stood the war memorial near the spot where the IRA ripped the heart out of the community in 1987 and which allowed Gordon Wilson, who died last year, to show the world the power of forgiveness and the desire for peace.

"What would Gordon have thought of this?" asked one in Northern Ireland which could jeopardise the delicatelybalanced Loyalist paramilitary ceasefire and plunge the province into a full-scale civil

The nationalist INLA, riven

by a violent internal feud and weakened by the seizure outside

Dublin in April last year of much of its arsenal, is not believed capable at present of mounting a major bombing

Germany ... DM4.5 Sweden.... Skr21 Greece Dr450 Switzerland . Str4.00 Back issues of the Independent are available from: Liziembourg ... 1.F60 USA $3.00 Historic Newspapers, telephone 0988 402455. Splinter group from Provisionals

Use this voucher to try our 12-page Summer of Sport pull-out this Wednesday

THE INDEPENDENT for only 10p on Wednesday

Independent on Wednesday 17 July 1996 and pay only 10p. (Home delivery customers have until 14 August 1996 to present this voucher to your newsagant), if

To the Retailer: Please accept this voucher as part payment for The Independent on Wednesday 17 July 1996. (reader pays 10p) To receive your normal ferms plus a 2p handling lee, please provide your wholesaler's name and your box no and return the completed voucher to your wholesaler by 21 August 1996. This voucher is not to be used in conjunction with any other ofter – It is valid for The

had been planning armed action Bombers' leader issued earlier

the existence of a military wing tained for the above." within the group.

group known as Republican after 2,000lb of explosives were The group, which split from discovered south of the border with the Irish Republic in the Provisionals in 1986, had been planning armed actions. County Monaghan. Security sources linked the find with RSF Their suspicions are based on members. Raids throughout the Irish Republic in October 1994 targetting RSF supporters saw the seizure by gardai of hand guns, number of dissident IRA ammunition, grenades and hardliners opposed to the then radio equipment.

The RSF conference endorsed "the right of the Irish people to use whatever degree of controlled and disciplined force necessary in resisting English aggression, and, in a calcu-Ruairi O'Bradaigh, endorsed lated side-swipe at talk of IRA attacks on British military decommissioning, condemned threats against the military targets and made no secret of "any surrender of arms ob-

A Dublin RSF spokesman That warning came two days told The Independent that it had recruited experienced IRA members from units in Belfast, Dublin and Derry, RSF had repeatedly denounced the 1994 IRA cousefire as a "surren-Mr O'Bradaigh maintained the IRA cessation of violence had provided a "window of opportunity" for the more militant splinter group to start a new military campaign against the British presence in Northern Ireland.

Yesterday the IRA issued a statement denying it carried out the Enniskillen attack. Sinn Fein and IRA leaders have tourism renaissance in recent been keenly aware of the dan- years following extensive ger of carrying out bomb attacks restoration.

campaign. Gardai also noted that the Enniskillen bomb came just hours after an IRA appeal for To the Wholesaler: Please credit the returning retailer with 32p (ROI 37p) This calm, suggesting it would use richides 2p Retailer Handling Allowance par voucher. To claim your credit together force only if nationalist areas with 1p per voucher handled, please send to Voucher Rede Court, Cremes Parm Rd, Besildon, Rasex $514 3DR. came under further attack. Sources in Londonderry say known IRA figures early on Fri-Reader's name _____ day ordered young would-be arsonists out of a store in the city centre which has been seen something of an economic and

Haute couture is 'ephemeral architecture which glorifies the proportions of the female body' Christian Dior

'The business is building its dreams on a myth from the past ... I don't know if others are selling dreams or nightmares' Pierre Berge

'I make clothes for the contemporary faces of Eve. I'm surrounded by women and I say: Would you wear this?' Gianni Versace

Haute couture is kept for vengeful wives and mistresses ... Valentino for the first and Versace for the second Nicholas Coleridge

Haute couture humour: 'If you build a dress wrongly, it's a drag. If you build a house wrongly you die' _ Karl Lagerfeld

A week of the emperor's new clothes?

The Paris shows drew their usual accolades But how deserving were they? Rebecca

Fowler reports As the designers took their bows and the supermodels bounced off the catwalks back into the changing rooms at the end of the Paris shows last week, there were the usual bouquets, hugs and parties. But in the background was the growing army of dissenters, asking whether high fashion has finally gone out of fashion.

It has been a particularly bad year for the industry. Models have been lambasted for their anorexic figures; the pressure to find a new look has prompted fresh follies, which appear to flatter no one; and the great fashion houses including Dior are anxiously seeking a new generation of iously seeking a new generation of designers to breathe life back into

Among the most outspoken critics of the fashion world's vapid exploits and rich pickings is Colin McDowell, the fashion historian. He has portrayed Christian Lacroix, the polytocal to take over at Dies as head tipped to take over at Dior as head of design, as fashion's "Jack the Ripper", Vivienne Westwood as its "answer to Spinal Tap", and John Galliano is dismissed as "a latter-day Miss Havisham"

In their beyday in the Fifties, the fashion houses set dizzy heights of style and originality in pursuit of the ultimate chic, supported by the most glamorous women of the day. Margot Fonteyn wore Dior, Audrey Hepburn was linked with Givenchy and Brigitte Bardot with Louis Feraud in the most famous partnerships....

Pierre Berge, the partner of Yves Saint Laurent, is among those who have lamented the passing of the business is building its dreams on a myth from the past," he said. "No one has or will ever be able to construct a human equal to the greats, Chanel, Dior or Saint Laurent. He added: "I don't know if these others are selling their dreams or their nightmares. But with fewer women prepared to pay extortionate sums, haute couture has struggled to find a role on the modern catwalk. As early as 1968 Cristobel Balenciaga lamented "there's no one left to dress". The modern market consists of fewer than 3,000 women worldwide prepared to consider paying £10,000 for

Instead, high fashion has evolved into a marketing ploy to keep the big names alive, and the fashion mafia has become ever more sensitive. Karl Lagerfield, known in the industry as the Kaiser, who earns around £10m for his designs for Chanel, banned a senior United States fashion writer for her damning comments on the absurdity of

The champions of haute couture insist that it is one of the last great enclaves of exclusivity, that it provides escapism and can be as visionary as any art form. They say that to wearing an original painting. Christian Dior described it grandly as "ephemeral architecture which glorifies the proportions of the female body Gianni Versace was adamant that the designers of the highest spheres created real clothes for real women. He said: "I make clothes for the contemporary faces of the modern haute conture put forof Eve. I never do a dress fitting my-

women and I always say: Would you ward by Nicholas Coleridge, is that self. I'm surrounded by five or six it is kept for vengeful wives and mis-

were (clockwise from left): Paco Rabanne's space sheath to be worn this winter; Givenchy's offering for this autumn; Jean Paul Gauttier's idea of what every man should have in his wardrobe; and Ferre's return to the more certain styles of the Fifties Photographs: Sheridan Morley tresses. While a Valentino number will keep the first happy, a Versace dress is an appropriately ephemeral gift for the second.

All this madness began with the extravagant Marie-Antoinette and her lavish dress-maker Rose Bertin. But the first true couturier was an Englishman, Frederick Worth, who dressed Empress Eugenie and the actress Sarah Bernhardt in Paris in the last century. But the irony of modern high fashion is that while it was started to create one-off exclusives in world where mass-produced goods were becoming commonplace, increasingly it has been reshaped by the high street. The critics claim it is no longer clear who is following who.

In a flourish at the end of the Paris shows I seemed to the paris shows Lagerfield resurrected the dreaded leggings famous for going baggy in all the wrong places. Most dedicated followers of fashion would expect them to be more readily available at British Home Stores than Chanel.

Mr McDowell quipped this week-end that they were less reminiscent of "young flappers", the theme of the Chanel show, than of "old slap-pers". The difference is, of course, that Lagerfield's will sell for £200 a pair, while the less dedicated will find leggings for sale at local market stalls for as little as £7.99.

Perhaps an even greater irony is that Coco Chanel, the most enduring name in haute countre, based her own designs on ease. She was determined that women deserved a wardrobe in which they felt comfortable and confident, prompting her to take cotton Jersey, then used only for men's underwear, to make chic and simple clothes for

Her creations were a far cry from the recent range of clothes on parade on skinny models, which have become a test of beauty over absurdity where it is a feat simply not to look entirely ridiculous. The idea of anyone other than a model wearing them, is at best an expensive joke at the cost of very rich

If it is all nonsense perhaps the designers, who can afford to smile on their fat salaries, are right in suggesting that the public should keep a sense of humour. Commenting on the difference between architecture and haute couture, Lagerfield said: "If you build a dress wrongly, it's a drag. If you build a house wrongly

Falling into fashlon: Naomi Campbell

REBECCA FOWLER

Not with a bang but with a topple: that is the way a pair of haute couture shoes found their way from the catwalk onto the High Street - at least in the case of Vivienne Westwood's celebrated skyscraper platforms. The shoes, which stunned the fashion world by achieving new heights of impracticality, were famously modelled by Naomi Campbell three years ago in Paris. The shoes were so high that she lost her balance and toppled over in full view of the fashion photographers. The fall was viewed as an appropriately absurd presentation of a high-fashion joke. But three years on, platform shoes with heels only modestly lower than Westwood's have become one of the most popular items

At the time when Campbell stumbled a few paces in them they were available only from Westwood, who charged around £180 for a pair. They are currently lined up in chain stores and High Streets throughout the country for as little as £20. Their success has been attributed to the recent nostalgia for the Seventies. Westwood, in classic designer style, apparently anticipated the move backwards, commenting that "there is nothing new under the sun" in the world of fashion.

Success is a pushover for platform shoes termined to keep up with the times, albeit trippingly, the platform heel is a must. The first were designed by Salvatore Ferragamo in the late Thirties, although women were wearing cork wedges as early as the 1500s. The original pair of Westwood's classic blue platform-heeled shoes have been preserved for posterity. They are currently displayed in a glass

bert Museum, acquired by Amy de la Haye, curator of the department of 20th-century dress, who described how they epitomised the world of high

Ms de la Haye said: "In these shoes, you get out of a taxi, sit down and look fabulous. They are definitely for the leisured life. But people have always worn uncomfortable clothes. Glamour isn't painless.

Photo: Adrian Cook High street fashion

133MHz Pentium® chip. 120MHz price. Going quick.

Another outstanding offer from Dell. But you'll have to be quick. For the price of a 120MHz PC, we're giving you the Dell Dimension" P133t with 133MHz of Pentium processor power. So for £1.149 (£L379.45 incl. delivery and VAT) it's not only much faster but also comes with 16Mb EDO RAM.

a 256Kb Pipeline Burst Cache, a Six Speed CD-ROM Drive and Microsoft³ Office Professional 95- the industry's leading business application. All of this plus the advantages of our award winning support and the reliability you'd expect from the UK's largest direct PC manufacturer.* To secure this offer you must call us now on 01344 724662 and get a top performance PC at a much lower price.

£1,149 (£1,379.45 incl. delivery+VAT)

TISA SHARED EXPANSION SLOTS • SIX SPEED CO-ROM DRIVE • MID-SIZED DESK TUP OR MINI TOWER CHASSIS • MICROSOFT® WINDOWS 95 表情 and the section of the Company The c the c LOM have step (howe mast aton this (to hi char: Will a mi er te Fon spec achi expe a mi T agai tear aga: alor OF U Sch only wer rou cide Fra whe

> Gi Αι Bi Αı El Si

m) wa

M Sı

They huffed and they puffed. They puffed again. But it didn't quite fall down

There were red faces faces at Felindre steelworks near Swansea yesterday when the demolition men arrived to flatten the site which was decor went off, its legs collapsed but the tower refused to topple. Spectators (right) found the situation amusing. Eventually a crane and ball had to employed to bring the tower to the ground

fillsborough police challenge court ruling

Legal Affairs Editor

Six police officers who became psychologically ill because of the 1989 Hillsborough football stadium tragedy will today seek 10 establish a legal right to compensation in a landmark case before the Court of Appeal.

The six officers, most of whom tended to injured and dying fans on the pitch and bodies in a temporary mortuary, are challenging a High Court ruling played during the horror did not entitle them to damages, despite an admission of negligence by the three defendants in the action - the South Yorkshire force, Sheffield Wednesday Football Club, and the engineers Eastwood & Partners.

The ruling by Mr Justice Waller at the High Court in Sheffield, contrasts with last month's £1.2m out-of-court settlement for 14 other officers involved in the disaster, on 15 April 1989, which claimed 96 lives. They fought to rescue Liverpool fans from being crushed to death in the mayhem within the pens at the Leppings Lane the Hillsborough

The six - PC Mark Bairstow, 46; PC Anthony Beavis, 48; PC Geoffrey Glave, 46; DC Ronald Hallam, 47; Sgt Janet Smith; and Insp Henry White -who all fell victim to post-traumatic stress disorder, will argue that the judge was wrong to rule they were not close enough to the rescue scene and had not artificial distinction. Some of the

CHOOSING YOUR

FIRST MORTGAGE

AS CHOOSING

YOUR FIRST HOME.

Abbey National have a range of mortgages to suit First Time Buyers. For example, you can get an impressive 5% Cashback with our Standard Variable Rate mortgage. And with one of our Discounted mortgages you can benefit from a 3% Cashback, to help you with the

IS AS IMPOR

And don't worry, our experienced mortgage advisors are on hand to

To find out how you can take your first step onto the housing ladder

call us on 0800 100 800 Monday to Friday 8.00am to 9.00pm or

Saturday 8.00am to 4.00pm, quoting reference A403F, or just call

http://www.abbeynational.co.uk guide you through the whole process of buying your first home.

cost of setting up your new home.

into your nearest branch.

call of duty.
The validity of another 17 officers' claims - and any future one by emergency service members - turns on the outcome of today's test case. Simon Allen, of the solicitors Russell Jones & Walker - which is handling the cases on behalf of the Police Federation - said: "Why should it make any difference, whether officers dealt with dying or dead people inside or outside the pens? It is an incredibly resucitation.

"Like the 14, they accepted the normal risks of their service but were faced with dealing with the quite exceptional and gruesome consequences of the negligent actions of others, for which they were in no way

A raling for the officers will be bound to reopen wounds among bereaved families, many of whom received only modest compensation or none at all.

A PC's story, page 14

Clarke aims at £3.9bn public spending cut

DIANE COYLE Economics Editor

Kenneth Clarke, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, is aiming for a cut of £3 billion to £5 billion in public spending next year to pay for tax cuts and highlight the Conservatives' longterm aim of shrinking the public

Independent economists assumed that last week's worse-than-expected Government borrowing figures would rule out tax cuts, but ministers are determined to make a firm pre-election promise of lower taxes paid for by savings achieved in the present round of talks between the Treasury and spending ministers.

The prospect of tax cuts is regarded as so electorally essential that Treasury ministers hope they will act as a strong discipline in the annual ritual of the spending round, already well

The Cabinet is due to decide ie ovelsti iekei ot 2 when it meets on Thursday. Ministers held the first pre-Budget meeting with officials at Chevening, the Foreign Secretary's country residence, on Friday and Saturday to discuss the scope for reductions in the existing expenditure plans.

Cuts of up to £3bn have been earmarked because inflation has turned out lower than expected over the past year. That means that the same level of spending in real terms can be achieved with less cash.

However, ministers also want to emphasise their philosophical shift on the size of the state - a shift they accept many New Labour politicians have also made. The Government is seeking further "sensible" spending cuts this year as a first step on the road to cutting back the public sector. With the resultant savings, they hope to reduce taxes and lessen the uncomfortably high government borrowing re-

promote the pre-election message that taxpayers can do better than the state when it comes to underwriting their welfare.

Kenneth Clarke: electoral

These cuts are intended to

Ministers describe the growth in government during the past 30 years as an aberration and want to return it to mid-1960s

That would mean eventually trimming the share of public expenditure in the economy from its 42 per cent (and the 1997-98) to less than 35 per cent. The Government sees this as consistent with protecting fundamental public services such as health and education, arguing that, for example, the massive expansion of higher education in the 1960s took place when the state was much smaller. This implies that most of the longterm adjustment would entail shrinking social security spending, which accounts for nearly one-third of all government spending. Tony Blair has said that a Labour Government's aim would also be to shift resources from welfare to education spending.

Behind the ritual posturing. the present spending round is as difficult as any other. Ever though spending departments were asked not to submit their usual annual letter bidding for funds, several did so anyway.

Some departments face acute cluding the Ministry of Agriculture - due to the beef crisis - the Home Office, because of growing prison costs, and Education, where Gillian Shephard argues that a generous settlement is critical in an election

The Treasury believes there is scope for cuts across government, including further reductions in Whitehall running costs. Last week it raised its forecast for public sector borrowing by more than £4bn to £27bn.

Church of England Synod: Members express fears

Royal divorce a shock to evangelical loyalist

ANDREW BROWN Religious Affairs Correspondent

A prominent evangelical theologian yesterday broke the Church of England's General Synod's about the royal divorce. We're all fed up with it," said Dr Elaine Storkey, whose hus-band, Alan, caused a furore last year when he refused to sign a church report that suggested abandoning the phrase "living in sin". Speaking on the GMTV Sunday Programme, she said: There's clearly something very wrong" about the prospect of a divorced king who had confessed adultery becoming Supreme Governor of the Church of England.

"If you're asking for my per-sonal opinion, it's an embarrassment. But it's a constitutional issue. As long as the church is the Church of England and established, we have the monarch as the head of the church in titular form and whoever that monarch is is, ipso facto, the head of the church: we can't do anything about it.

"So, whatever we think of Prince Charles and his behaviour - and some of us think quite a few things about it we're still saddled with him as the head of the church because he's going to be the monarch." Dr Storkey said there was "an enormous loss of respect in the country as a whole and, of Prince of Wales", Speaking in York, where the Synod is meeting, she said at least five bishops agreed with her, though few would say so to the press. The Bishop of Sodor and Man, the Right Rev Noel Jones, who does not believe in remarriage after divorce, reitcrated that he would not feel able to swear an oath of allegiance to a king who had remarried after his divorce.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr George Carey, has set up a committee to consider the rules governing the remarriage of divorcees, and to strive for a coherent policy. At the moment the Church of England has about 43 policies on the issue, one for each diocese. A rough sampling of Synod beliefs a beliefs a cr faiths course, in the church, for the Prince of Wales". are unlikely to be liberal enough to let unfaithful husbands marry their mistresses in church.

Prince Charles: Has lost respect in the church

The Bishop of Rochester, the Right Rev Michael Nazir-Ali, does not discriminate between remarriage and a service of blessing for second marriages, unlike many clergy. But the remarriages he allows must meet stringent conditions. All financial and other wranglings left over from previous marriages must have been settled justly. Someone who has abandoned his or her spouse for a new love may not remarry in

In the diocese of Oxford, one of the richest and most populous in the country, the bishop. the Right Rev Richard Harries. leaves these decisions entirely up to the consciences of the dergy involved, though there are two pages of diocesan guidelines. Most, he says, prefer to use a service of blessing rather than a full remarriage. He himself has only remarried a divorced man once - a friend of his who was also a priest. ■ The Synod yesterday welcomed as a "substantial contribution to theology" a report that says Hell certainly exists but may be empty. There were eloquent evangelical protests against the Doctrine Commission's report. The Mystery of Salvation, on the ground that it dealt more with salvation than damnation and did not state clearly enough its

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE OR OTHER LOAN SECURED ON IT. For your security and to assist us in improving our service to you we may record or monitor all calls to Alboy National Direct. All packages at allabe depend on customer status, one of deposit and terms over which the querial offer relate All special offers are deposit of at least 5%. See in branch for details. All offers are subject to at allability and may be withdrawn at any time. Typical example for a First Time Buyer decount of 2% combined with a 4% callabelt on our Standard Variable Rate of 7 04% 7.3% APR and 31.8.97; a comple timale and lemalet, aged 2%, applying for an endowment mortgage of (40.000 on a purchase price of 142,105 sectured over 25 years, 300 monthly interest payments of 451.84 net of tax relief, plus the final repayment of (40.052 65 capital include. High Loan to Value Fee of (652, 65 added to the advance). 300 monthly endowment premiums of (58-22, 10tal amount payable (42.215-22 melmles (140 inspection fee, 455 deeds handling fee charged on redemption, (117,50 legal fees and accorded interest of (28.07 monthing completion on 27.12.90. Example calculated at 5 04% for the full mortgage term 5.5% APR. No account has been taken of any change in interest rates. In this example from 1.9.47 car Standard Variable Ra. will apple, which is likely to result on an increase in your monthly reportments. As a condition of this discount a charge required applying to the discount a charge of the mortgage is redeemed, converted from variable rate terms or a cq. all repayments on a repayment mortgage and define 31.8.2002. In addition to the charge applying to the Discount a charge equivalent to the Cashback received will be made if you repay the mortgage on to full before 11.8.2002. All APRs are typical and variables to previous under 15 years of age. A high Lean to Value fee is Discriming coargo equivariant to the coargo and repair the interest product of the adoption and a charge over the policy. All hans subject to status and valuation and not available to persons under the years of age. All light control is also be the required if the loan exceeds 75% of the property's valuation for more critical cases the product of the downers in lowers. We require the property to be assured. If no more of through its weight to charge an administration for of £25, Written quotations are available on require. But it critical is of going to press NAs a personning of purchase price or administration before the National pic, which is regulated by the Personal life estimated. Although the state of the products. Abbey National and the Umbrella Couple symbol are trademark, if Abbey National pic, Abbey House, Baker Street, London NW1 oXL. United Kingdom beliefs about members of oth-

MORTGAGES

Top BBC man has shares in comedy shows

Conflict of interest denied

CHRIS BLACKHURST

A senior BBC executive is a major shareholder in a leading independent production company, which makes several of the corporation's most popular

Geoffrey Perkins, head of comedy for BBC TV, holds a 25 in Hat Trick has left him open per cent stake in Hat Trick Pro- to accusations of a potential ductions, a company which is currently at the centre of an internal inquiry by the corporation for alleged financial irregularities in the making of its hit show. Have I Got News For You.

When Mr Perkins, a successful producer, left Hat Trick last year he gave up his directorship of the company, but he did not relinquish his quarter shareholding. Documents at Companies House disclose that he still owns 300 of the 1,200 shares issued by the company which last year made profits of Hat Trick is now the subject of a BBC audit following the leaking of confidential papers which suggest that the company has been over-charging for producing the satirical quiz show Have I Got News For You.

BBC accountants are examining whether expenses claimed by the company for the show were justified. Hat Trick is understood to be co-operating fully with the BBC accountants.

Denise O Donoghue, a director of the company, said there was no truth in the allegations. "We are clean, we run a very clean company," she said, adding that she was confident the accusations would be fully dealt with.

According to Ms O'Don-oghue, Hat Trick is the target of a smear campaign by an ex-employee. Today, the company will attempt to secure an injunction in the courts preventing the former member of staff attacking them further. While Mr Perkins is not linked to the Have I Got News For You inquiry - the show falls within the features department. not comedy - his shareholding in Hat Trick has left him open conflict of interest.

Ms O'Donoghue said, "Of course, it is a potential conflict of interest", but, she claimed, "our success has not depended on knowing the right people.

John Woodward of Pact, the independent producers' association, said that his members had been worried about Mr Perkins' role in judging their output and his ability to influence commissioning decisions.

Mr Woodward said, however, that he understood the BBC had gone out of its way to ensure Mr Perkins was not involved in commissioning Hat Trick programmes. Mr Woodward described the shareholding as "very unusual" - the BBC had been desperate to attract him and Mr Perkins would not give up his shares.

Mr Perkins said that he could not sell the shares because none of his fellow shareholders had wanted to buy them. A BBC spokeswoman said: "Geoffrey is a huge talent in the comedy field and a huge asset to the BBC." The corporation, she said, had taken steps to ensure that he was not involved in commissioning Hat Trick programmes. She was unable to say when the inquiry into Hat Trick and Have I Got News For You would be completed.

BBC's World Service, radio
page 15

Comedy cast: Geoffrey Perkins (Photograph: Andy Lane) and the team from the quiz show Have I Got News for You (from left) lan Hislop, Angus Deayton and Paul Merton The executive with the talent for raising the best laughs for which it charges the BBC lowance of £4,250 with an ex-£1.2m a series. Company doc-tra £550 for the Christmas items at the centre of the inquiry.

offrey Perkins - virtually nobody else in television or radio can match his comedy pedigree and talent for making hit shows, writes Chris Blackhurst.

Mr Perkins who, helped to found Hat Trick Productions, has been associated with some of the most popular shows of the past decade, including Drop the Dead Donkey, KYTV, Spitting Image, Sanuday (and Friday) Night Live, the Harry Enfield programmes, Clive Anderson Talks Back, Whose Line Is It Anyway? and The Man from Auntie. He also produced Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy for

With Jimmy Mulville, Mary

It is not hard to see why the BBC was so keen to hire Gehelped found Hat Trick, which became Britain's most successful comedy programme-maker. Last year, the company's four directors shared more than £700,000 in salaries.

Part of the company's recent financial success was derived from Have I Got News For You, uments indicate that for those who work and appear on the show it is a rich seam. For the video of the show, host Angus Deayton was to be paid £16,400 and panel members Ian Hislop and Paul Merton £11,000 each. Mr Deayton has a clothing al-

The BBC inquiry is focusing on the claims made by Hat Trick for a whole range of production costs. It does not relate to payments made to the show's stars and there is no suggestion that they knew anything about the not know "the detailed ins and outs" of the case but said that he understood the sums involved to be tiny. He felt sure that Hat Trick would emerge unblemished. stressed that the inquiry has not dealings with anything concerning Hat Trick. He claimed his position as head of comedy had, if anything, counted against the company. I do not have a conflict of interest because nothing from Hat Trick that is put up Mr Perkins and the BBC to the BBC ever comes through

Tories give benefits their best mail-shot

OLIN BROWN AND JOHN RENTOUL

Hundreds of thousands of homes are to be sent Conservative Party letters warning parents that, if Labour gets into office, they lose £10.80 a week in child benefit.

Tory Central Office will use computer databanks to identify homes with 16-to-18-yearolds in full-time education, whose entitlement to child benefit is under "review" by

One Labour source said the Tory propaganda drive would speed up its review, which is under attack also within the Labour Party. Another source, close to Gordon Brown, the shadow Chancellor, said the results of the review would probably be published within the next 10 days, but denied that this had anything to do with Tory

For this age group, the future of child benefit - not paid to the parents of young people who leave school at 16, or to households receiving other benefit is being discussed by Mr Brown;
David Blunkett, Labour's spokesman on education and Imploymen; and Chris Smith, its social security spokesman.

A spokesman for Mr Brown said all three had been surprised by how unfair the existing system was. Mr Brown's intention is to transfer some of the subsidy from the taxpayer to the better off, and increase incentives for the least advantaged teenagers to stay in education

"You can safely assume that the parents of pupils at Eton are hardly in need of child benefit." the spokesman said, implying that some form of parental means test would form part of Labour's plan. But the complex interaction of child benefit, student grants and loans, and welfare benefits had protracted the the review process, he said.

Mr Blunkett has proposed an education allowance which could be paid to young people, while Mr Smith is arguing for the allowance to be given to the mother for upkeep, as with existing child benefit.

Ministers believe Labour's pre-manifesto published last week ducked the issue because the three could not resolve their differences. That was denied yesterday but a senior Labour source said there was advantage for Labour in speeding up the review to avoid the Tories shameless opportunism". An unexpected result of the furore has been a Tory promise to preserve universal

Brains, not class, are the key to success

NICHOLAS TIMMINS Public Policy Editor

Britain is a fairer place than many people think, with job suc-cess more dependent on ability and motivation than on social class, according to figures drawn from the National Child Development Study. The study, which has followed the fortunes of 18,000 people born in March 1958. shows that in 1991, when they were 33, ability and motivation as measured at school, plus qualifications gained, were powerful predictors of the jobs people did.

Parents' social class, housing conditions, whether the child went to a private or state school, and whether parents had high ambitions for their children, were much lesser influences. "Ability and motivation are the key predictors of lowermiddle-class failure," Peter Saunders, Professor of Sociology at the University of Sussex, a much greater degree than usuconcludes.

Writing in a pamphlet for the free market think-tank the Institute of Economic Affairs. Professor Saunders says sociologists have been "barking up the wrong tree."

"Occupational selection, by and large, is not rigged," he says. The dice are not heavily loaded. The game is worth playing even for those born into the poorest social conditions. If people are increasingly led to believe that the North Screen SWIP 3LB. 2.60 competition is fixed, then of course they will conclude that it makes no sense for them to join the game. State dependency and criminality are then the only games they can join."

It does, says Professor Saunders, "make some difference whether your father is an unskilled manual worker or a well-paid professional, whether your mother left school at the minimum legal age or stayed on to do exams, whether your parents encouraged you in your school work, whether they tried to motivate you with their ambitions or left you to find your own way, whether you had your own bedroom in which to do your homework.

"The importance of sheer luck should not be overlooked", he says, and nobody can doubt, that inherited privilege still counts for something. But John Major's aim of a "classless working class success and of society", and Tony Blair's desire to see hard work and effort rewarded, have been achieved to ally acknowledged.

Professor Saunders concedes that the data on which his conclusions are based are not perfect: some people have been lost to the follow-up studies since 1958, and memployed, parttime workers and housewives are excluded from his figures. Nonetheless, the study represents probably the best data set available.

Unequal For For IEA, 2 Lord

CHRONOMAT

At a time when instruments unerringly cope with Mach 1 flight data, continued improvements to the mechanical chronograph simply underscore that there's more to time than technology. A movement's intricate beauty or a hand-polished case's lustrous gleam do put technological progress in a broader perspective. Like the Concord, the world's first but surely not last supersonic transport, CHRONOMATS draw time and space ever closer with aesthetic excellence as well as outstanding technical performance.

G·O·L·D·S·M·I·T·H·S & W·A·L·K·E·R & H·A·L·L

THE MARK OF A FINE JEWELLER

Breiting Watches are available at selected branches of the Goldsmiths Group, one of the country's leading quality retail jewellers with over 100 branches nationwide. ABERDEEN • BRIGHTON • CAMBRIDGE • CANTERBURY • CHELMSFORD • DERBY • GLASGOW • LEAMINGTON SPA • LEEDS LEICESTER • LONDON • MAIDENHEAD • NEWCASTLE • OXFORD • READING • THURROCK • WIMBLEDON For details of your nearest stockist call FREE on 0800 220733

INSTRUMENTS FOR PROFESSIONALS

RICHARD SMITH

One hundred shopkeepers in a historic market town will today

step up their fight against an out-of-town superstore which has severely dented their tak-

Traders in Leominster, Hereford and Worcester, are jubilant

33333 Monthly Restal E15 (E12.77 + VAT) Peak times 8.00-19.00 Mon to Fri. Mandatory Itemised billing charged at £1.77 mc VAT per month. Line rental (debited monthly in advance) and airlime charges will be debited to your nominated credit/charge or Defra card. Calls charged in units of 30 seconds after the lirst minute.

FREEPHONE 0500 000

scheme designed to lure cus- ing to woo thousands of a specialist pork butcher's shop, tomers back from a Safeway tourists, who from today can store which opened four years claim a free visitors card enitling them to the same privileges as

Nearly 8,000 shoppers hold the locals. Tourism is an increasingly important part of our trade and we want visitors to come to us instead of an out-of-town super-

"Before the loyalty scheme began everyone was talking the town down the drain and saying Leominster was dead. But the scheme has exceeded all expectations by a very wide margin my turnover is up 40 per cent on Each time customers use their loyalty card at Mr Hurley's shop they are given a raffle ticket - the winner drawn each month receives free meat for a Leominster's traders decided market," the scheme organiser last year ... it is opening people's to launch the scheme after a lo-Graham Hurley, 45, who owns eyes to what is available in the cal Chamber of Commerce sur-had been converted into houses. Two professors from Staffordshire University are studying the experiment to see if it could benefit other towns. An initial survey shows that 42 per cent of traders believe it has brought in more shoppers and 26 per cent claim their cus-

Already shopkeepers in Newcastle under Lyme, Staffordshire, Ross-on-Wye, Hereford and Worcester, and Belper in Derbyshire are planning similar

A spokesman for Safeway spokesman, Peter Sitch, said: "Before we built our store shop-

Small town celebrates success in challenge against superstore shops. They've been saying its vey found 35 shops in the town cheaper than the supermarket." vey found 35 shops in the town tomers are spending more to other large food stores price of the supermarket. They've been saying its vey found 35 shops in the town tomers are spending more to other large food stores price of the supermarket. comed that retailers in Leominster are taking positive steps rather than, as in many places, complaining about the competition. Anything that makes the town a more attractive destination for shoppers is to be welcomed."

But now the traders are try-Libraries to boost trade with Sunday opening

JOJO MOYES

Britain's libraries look likely to follow the example set by seven-day trading, and begin opening on Sundays.

A trial period of Sunday opening at a library in Woking in Surrey proved to be a huge success, with more than 200 visitors an hour flocking through the doors. Now local authorities and library chiefs are assessing the results of other trial Sunday opening periods in six regions throughout the

According to the Library Association, which represents 25,000 librarians, much of the pressure for libraries to open on the Sabbath came from local shops and

"The Woking example was interesting because there was pressure from local retailers, who were finding that sales figures were up when the library was open." said a spokeswoman for the Library Association

Now all libraries are being encouraged to consider sevenday opening, in a radical attempt to bring them into line with the needs of the future.

"Libraries have suffered from political invisibility, and have not been very good at marketing

"But, as this shows, they're now changing that," the spokeswoman said.

Previous research has shown followed by other libraries that libraries can prove to be an important focal point for the community, being Westminster, Newham, Brent places in which all sectors of and Barnet, as well as Knowsley the communityfeels com- in Merseyside, are also

They are also being seen as an important part of the information "revolution". She pointed to the example of the computer mogul Bill libraries in the United Sundays.

States in the hope of boosting the availability of information.

"Loyal To Leominster" cards

which can be used to obtain gifts and discounts from shops involved in the campaign launched four months ago.

A new bid was under way to fund a similar project in the UK. [Bill Gates] sees them as by far the best place to bridge the gap between the information rich and the information poor," she

The three-month trial in Woking revealed that the town's library received almost as many visitors on a Sunday as on a weekday, despite being open only from 1.30pm to 5.30pm. The added feeling of "relaxation" on a Sunday was said to be a big factor in users' tendency

Many first-time users said they were too busy to visit the library during the week, while others were attracted by the free Sunday parking in the town. Survey evidence showed that after a few weeks, a core of regular Sunday users began to develop. County councillors support the library's desire to open on Sunday every week, but say that there is not enough cash to fund the move without reducing the level of service at oth-

Library chiefs are hoping to pay for the extra hours by seeking sponsorship from the town centre's stores, which will benefit from increased numbers of potential shoppers on

It is a move likely to be around the country. Librarians in the London boroughs of experimenting with Sunday

But Mr Shimmon added that because of poor funding, it was necessary for library staff to optimum research their Gates, owner of Microsoft and hours carefully. He added that one of the richest men in the as with other Sunday world, who was funding the openings, staff should not provision of computers in be forced to work on

Stretching out: The Rambert dance company rehearsing Quicksilver, based on the life of Rambert founder, Marie Rambert, at London's Coliseum Photograph: Laurie Lewis

Psychiatrists 'on the edge' as care crisis worsens

GLENDA COOPER-

"A state of deep crisis", "intolerable risk", "working on the edge". This is how psychiatrists describe care in the community in Britain.

Last week Professor Chris Thompson, registrar of the Royal College of Psychiatrists, spoke of "an upsurge of years of frustration" when its AGM overwhelmingly supported a resolution severely criticising the shortage of acute beds for the mentally ill.

It was only the third time in 25 years that such a resolution had been passed. The previous two had condemned foreign governments.

A conference of senior psychiatrists in London last week highlighted the difficulties they faced. Jeremy Coid, Professor in forensic psychiatry at St Bartholomew's, London, described the present system as a great trundling wheel rolling in the wrong direction". Dr Trevor Turner, a consultant psychiatrist at Barts and Homerton, said simply that care in the community was an "oxymoron". The number of hospital beds for the mentally ill has steadideclined since 1957 when there were more than 140,000. Now there are just over 40,000.

Prof Thompson said almost every acute ward in the coun-try had occupancy levels of more than 100 per cent and in London it could reach 140 per cent. The result is the "revolving door" syndrome where patients are discharged early only to return. The revolving door is spinning faster and faster," said Prof Coid.

Emergency admissions are becoming the norm. Last month the Department of Health revealed a spectacular rise in the number of patients detained under the Mental Health Act because they are a danger to themselves or others. In the five years to 1994-5 the numbers admitted rose by 55 per cent to 27,100. Voluntary act missions also rose 29 per cent. "You're constantly working on the edge," he said. "But the pressure on beds means there is pressure to discharge people as soon as they're better. Some of our nurses say as soon as patients can talk to them they have to be discharged. Faced with this situation, recruitment has become difficult. Dr Mike Harris, medical director of the independent Northampton hospital, St Andrews, estimated that in some areas as many as one in five consultancy posts are going unfilled.

Full up: Beds are scarce

While the RCP endorsed new measures in February by the Secretary of State for Health, Stephen Dorrell, it feels it is not enough. The resolution called for a moratorium on bed closures, an inspectorate to oversee trained staff in community-based developments and districts in England and Wales to produce a plan for comprehensive mental health care to be implemented within three years.

Otherwise, the profession feels. Dr Turner's account of "working on the edge" will

Day of danger for a stressed doctor

TANKE SHAFE

By 8am on Friday, Dr Martin Deahl, a consultant psychiatrist at Homerton and Barts hospitals, London, is in his office.

An hour later he is on his round of the acute ward: "We have 17 beds and 29 people needing them," he says. "Last year I admitted 460 people, all seriously disturbed ... People have to leave as quickly as they can, to make room for a more

He skips lunch to go straight to the emergency clinic, pursued by patients and relatives. Meanwhile, he receives a call. A schizophrenic patient has stopped taking his medication and is "going berserk in the community". "I'm physically guy ... [he] abuses drugs and is very dangerous when he is ill."

Dr Deahl is now 15 minutes late for a case conference for a patient who self-abuses. "When I turn up late it seems as if I'm not taking her case seriously." Driving through London in heavy traffic, he is late for an-housing officer who is threat-ening to evict him because of complaints from the neighbours: "If this man is evicted ... too busy to do anything about it, so I have to send a junior docdown, putting him back on the tor down to find this oft oin huge ward, and when he gets out he will have nowhere to live. Dr Deahl fills in forms for the schizophrenic and a council

admissions he has made, and leaves at around 6.30pm - nearly 11 hours after he started out.

"I'm 39, and I already know my retirement date: 29 September 2014. That says something about morale, if you know other meeting, this time with a it off by heart," he says.

Free phone Free connection Free calls.

SONY

MODEL CM-H444.

- 99 speed dials
- name/number memory Up to 80 mins talk-time Up to 20 hrs standby-time
- Complete with charger and standard battery ◆ Weight 240g

Peak Bate Calls 50p per min (42.5g + VAT) UK Wide 20p per min (17p + VAT)

OFFER LIMITED TO THE FIRST 200 CALLERS

- FREE PHONE Sony model CM-H444
- FREE CONNECTION to Vodafone LowCall worth £35.25 inc. VAT
- FREE CALLS £6.50 inc. VAT worth per month for 12 months

ORDER NOW WITH YOUR CREDIT CARD DETAILS FOR FREE DELIVERY IN 4 WORKING DAYS

PLEASE RAPE YOUR CHEDIT CARD AND THIS ADVENTISEMENT HARDY WHEN YOU CALL AND OMOTE REF 4470. (SORRY WE ARE SMARLE TO ACCEPT SYSTICAL CARDS) Offer subject to states and a standard airbone contract for each phone with Cellphones Direct Ltd. 195 Lower Rochmond Road, Richmond-upon-Thames TW9 4LNL
Full vention details and terms and conditions of this offer are available on request. © Copyright. Pagestered No. 2995272

American Express annual travel insurance.

Because you never know who you'll meet on holiday.

No matter who you bump into on holiday, you can rest assured our comprehensive annual travel insurance covers almost every eventuality, including up to £2 million medical expenses.

What's more, you don't have to be an American Express Cardmember to enjoy this worldwide security from a worldwide company.

So, to relax before you go on holiday, call the number below between 8am and 8pm quoting reference IA6.

Arrange 365 days of cover in just 5 minutes.

0800 700 737

accident or redundancy, the last thing you need to worry about is your mortgage. With a General Accident Direct Mortgage Protection Plan, you won't have to.

These days relatively few people qualify for income support on a mortgage. The ones who do receive nothing for the first two months and then only 50% of their interest payments for the next four months. Even worse than that, if you the 1st October 1995, you won't receive a single penny in support for the first nine months.

took out your mortgage after

But it's not all doom and gloom.

At General Accident Direct we have a variety of Mortgage Protection Plans. With us the average mortgage holder has peace-of-mind for only £15 a month. Cover lasts a minimum of twelve months and most home owners are eligible; including the self-employed, part-time workers and fixed-term contract workers. People in continuous employment* (at least 16 hours a week) for the last

General Accident

6 months and between 18-50 years old are eligible for cover. For more information call us on the number below.

PROTECT YOUR MORTGAGE FREEPHONE 0800 121 008

"CERTAIN CONDITIONS APPLY. Lines open Monday to Friday 9am-8pm, Saturday and Sunday 9am-5pm

Safety scare: Artists exposed to dangerous work practices and hazardous materials

Britons at risk in Germany's Hollywood

JASON BENETTO

British artists have been working with hazardous materials, inchiding chemicals suspected of causing cancer, on Europe's biggest movie theme park.

An Independent investigation has discovered that dozens, possibly hundreds, of Britons have been working without adequate protection and with little or no training.

Warner Brothers, which owns the £200m Movie World park near Düsseldorf in north Germany, and ICI, which supplied some of the chemicals, are inquiring into the allegations.

The Independent has established that several workers have been injured. Others are worried that they may have suffered long-term damage after work-ing next to toxic substances without protective clothing.

Despite assurances from the contractors and from Warner Brothers that the park was tightly policed, and that all employees followed set regulations, an Independent journalist was able to walk unchallenged onto the site, where he witnessed dangerous practices.

Warner Brothers' 40-hectare Movie World opened a fortnight ago. It features funfair rides and other attractions based on blockbusters such as Batman, Bugs Bunny and Superman.

Warner Brothers is planning to build a similar £225m film and television complex and theme park in west London.

During the German project, artists worked at least 60 hours a week - some worked 90 hours - for £7.50 an hour. Many have complained that they spent much of their time on repetitive manual work, rather than the creative work promised. Mivan Ltd, an Irish sub-contractor with 4,000 employees, built much of the scenery About 1,500 people, many of them labourers, were flown to Germany. Many left prematurely because of the conditions.

More than a dozen employees told the Independent that af ter little or no training they were expected to use electrical equipment such as chain saws and grinders, sometimes in the rain. Many artists ground blocks of foam into scenery. A fireproof layer was then sprayed on and painted. Both layers contain the chemical diphenylmethane diisocyanate (DMI), which causes tumours in tests on animals.

The ICI hazard labels on barrels of DMI warn that it is "harmful by inhalation, may cause sensitisation by inhalation,

Peter Drillingcourt, Mivan's group health and safety manager, said that his supervisors were instructed to follow safety regulations, and that safety equipment was available, but conceded that: "Not everything system and skin".

was perfect."

Some artists said they had to nake do with paper masks.

The site would have been closed down in the UK'

JASON BENNETTO and GRAHAM BALL

artists struggling to find work in Britain the offer of at least six weeks sculpting and painting on a prestigious theme park in Germany seemed too good an opportunity to miss.

Responding to an advertisement in the London Evening Standard they agreed to the £7.50 an-hour fee, with free food, lodging and flight. Work started immediately.

and eyes and is suspected of causing cancer. ICI, which man-artists, most of whom were graduates in their 20s and ear- However artists have told of ly 30s with degrees in subjects such as fine arts and design, transformed a vast building site in the Ruhr Valley into Warner Brothers Movie World.

But far from being a magical experience, for many of the artists it became a dangerous and exhausting endurance.

They tell a tale of bleak conditions in which they worked a minimum of 60 hours a week and had to use tools such as the proper supply of vital protective equipment and clothing.

They also reveal a lifestyle in which people were cramme into tiny portable cabins, of poor food, widespread drug taking and excessive drinking.

Perhaps most disturbing was the practice of unprotected scenic artists working next to contractors spraying a foam which contains a chemical that is very hazardous to the throat Over the next 12 months the ufactures part of the foam, has strict guidelines about its use. numerous times when they were not given the proper protective masks and goggles.

Many of them have complained of injuries and infections to eyes and throats.

Lynne Caldwell, 21, a mathematics graduate, with no experience of power tools, was handed a grinder on her first day at work and told to start moulding the hard foam. Within minutes it jumped and cut her leg which needed 15 stitches. She said: "None of us had ever seen a grinder before, I wouldn't touch one now I know how dangerous it is." Julia Clow, 37, a fine arts graduate, said: "As soon as I arrived I was handed a chainsaw and told to use it [to cut polystyrene].

"I was appalled. It was so heavy I could hardly lift it. I was given no instruction and their appeared to be no regard for alth and safety regulations." Hard hats were often unavailable, according to the artists, and when the Independent visited the site only the supervisors were wearing them.

Sarah, a scenic artist with a degree in fine art, heard she could earn some fast money working through a college friend. Within a few days she was on the plane to Germany. When she arrived she was taken to her new home, dozens of cabins stacked on top of each other, which was at the centre of the park. Here she would remain for five weeks. Her day started at about 6am with breakfast. Work began at 6.30am with a 15-minute break at 930. Lunch - sandwiches and fruit - was at 12.30. The 45-minute break was deducted from the wages. The day officially finished at 6.45.

On her first day, Sarah (not her real name) she was told to start covering with foil the metal rods that form the skeletons of huge pieces of scenery. There was no safety training and masks and goggles often ran out ... Experienced workmen out there said the site would have been closed down in 10 minutes if it was in the UK."

Road Rage, Parking Rage, Check-in Rage,

Lounge Rage, Gate Rage, Air Rage, Landing Rage, Baggage Reclaim Rage, Taxi Rage?

eurostar.

the passenger train from the centre of London to the centre of Paris or Brussels in just over 3 hours.

Take either

the tranquillisers or the Eurostar.

0345 30 30 30 or see your travel agent

Europe just got closer ...so don't forget your passport!

AA JOIN NOW FROM JUST £39 le join, call free HOW GO 0500 444 999 and ask for extension $123. immediate corer systistic.

Risky business: A worker

at the theme park

Uphill puff for the great railway vision`

CHRISTIAN WOLMAR Transport Correspondent

An ambitious plan to build the first major railway line in Britain for nearly a century is running into trouble after a tide of opposition from residents and local authorities. The Department of Transport has been inundated with 13,000 letters opposing the line, which would carry freight from the east Midlands to the mouth of the Channel tunnel. It has received only 300 letters in support despite a generous compensation offer by the developer.

Central Railway, a private company which last year raised "several million pounds" to produce a plan for the railway, as put forward a £3bn scheme

London. The scheme is to be discussed in Parliament before the recess, probably on 24 July, under a new procedure for major infrastructure projects, the Transport and Works Act 1992.

The line would start in Leicester and would carry lorries which would otherwise use motorways and other roads. It will be fed by two terminals, one near Rugby and the M1/M6 junction, the other near Denham in Buckinghamshire for traffic from the M40, M4 and M25.

The northern part of the route will use the bed of the old Great Central Railway, the last major line built in Britain which was closed as a result of the Beeching cuts in the Sixties and Seventies. It would then link up with the Chiltern Line, veering off through west London in Olympia and Streatham in the south-west, and then, apart from a tunnel under the North Downs, it will run along existing track to the Channel tunnel.

Although the line would be mainly for freight, there is also a plan to build a Motorail terminal at White City in west London. By 2020, it would carry 160 trains each day. But unprecedented opposition means that the project is unlikely to go ahead. Although government ministers are duty bound to present it to Parliament, the Tories have remained neutral in what will be a free vote and the front benches of both Labour and the Liberal Democrats are against it.

On the face of it, the concerted opposition seems odd as putting more freight on rail is support-

Building the Great Central Railway in 1899. The new line would follow much of its former track er, as Matthew Carrington, MP for Fulham, put it, "Everyone wants to see more freight off the roads but when proposing to put a line in the wrong place, the effects are catastrophic."

In Willoughby, Leicestershire, Doug Dodds is typical of the opponents. He lives in an old station house right next to the line and says it would devastate his smallholding: "We have lived here for 30 years and this would ruin us." He added: that they could be "blighted for years by a scheme that may not happen".

Iain Sim, deputy planning director of Croydon, says that

62 houses and 40 offices or factories would have to be demolished in the borough and another 130 properties might become uninhabitable. The council is highly critical of the lack of detail in Central Railway's plans and the company's failure to consider the environmental effects of the project. Roy Marshall who lives in a street in south Croydon where 20 houses would have to be demolished said: "Central have offered to buy houses for 25 per

£3,000 removal costs but most people just don't want to move." Opponents point to an alternative scheme to take lorry trailers on rail put forward by the Piggyback Consortium, a group of companies with rail interests including Eurotumnel. Their plan is to upgrade the West Coast Main Line at a cost of around £300m to allow freight to run from Glasgow, Manchester and Birmingham through the tunnel to the Continent. Others question why the line would go through central London.

Central Railway's business plan has been questioned in a report by Ove Arup commissioned by the 33 local authorities affected. It suggests the construction cost would be more than 50 per cent above probably be dropped.

Central's estimate and the revenue for 2010 has been overestimated by nearly £300m. However, Andrew Gritten, chairman of Central Railway pic is undaunted. He has just written to every member of Parliament and feels that most of the opposition is a result of Nimbyism and and of vested interests within the rail industry. He said: "You have to look at it in terms of national interest. There is a lot of support in getting freight off the roads." He added that many in the rail industry were worried about the new competition. The issue is set to be debated just before the parliamentary recess. Mr Gritten admitted that if the plan were defeated in Parliament, the scheme would

Which free pair will you choose?

When you buy any Boots brand spectacles you can choose another pair up to the same value, with single vision lenses, absolutely free. Including prescription sunglasses!

If you'd like varifocal or bifocal lenses in your second pair, we'll give you the frames free and the lenses for half the normal price.

> See our practice leaflet for full details. But hurry, this offer is for a limited period only.

Not available with non prescription sunglasses, Boots Pioneer Prescription Sunglasses, ready made reading glasses or any other offer.

Temporary life: Short-term contracts become norm

Temps take over the British workplace

PATRICK TOOHER

Demand for temporary staff is growing faster than at any time since the peak of the economic boom almost a decade ago and is now at its highest level since records began, according to Britain's biggest employment agency.

In a report published today, Reed Personnel Services says that employers continue to rely more heavily on temporary staff than permanent staff - with adverse consequences for the longterm health of the British

Figures for the second quar-ter of 1996 show that demand for temps jumped by 13 per cent compared with the first three months of the year, making it the largest single quarterly in-crease since 1987. Demand for permanent staff also continued to grow, but only by 5 per cent over the same period.

The changing nature of the British workplace as employers turn to temporary staff in large numbers has worrying implications for the labour market. according to Alec Reed, exceutive chairman of Reed Personnel Services, which runs 200 branches across the United Kingdom.

"As demand for temporary staff continues its steep rise.

Job search: The workplace is changing as employers singy seek temporary staff Photograph: Edward Sykes renewed his call for improve-

In particular, he wants provisions to be made to ensure that temporary staff receive the levels of training, support, sick pay and holiday pay that are automatically given to permanent staff.

*Employers need to realise that pay and benefits for these staff need to be at least in line with the going rate for permanent staff.

This is proving essential to standards combined with flexments to be made to the status ibility which today's workforce can offer.

Demand for temporary staff rose by 23 per cent year-on-year and now stands at its highest level since Reed began compiling its index in 1982. The index is now 38 per cent higher than its peak in the boom year of 1987.

Mr Reed predicts that demand for permanent staff. which has shown a steady, underlying growth since the depths of the recession four years ago. will return to 1990 levels with-

Hard going for graduates

BARRIE CLEMENT Labour Editor

Graduates are finding it in-creasingly difficult to find permanent jobs and many are forced to take temporary employment as a route to a ca-

Three years after leaving university one in three degree holders were on fixed-term contracts, almost half of which were less than a year in duration, according to an inquiry by the Institute of Employment

While the majority were in higher skilled occupations, significant numbers were in clerical, sales and jobs involving personal services. Only 6 per cent were self-employed, but some 40 per cent worked for small firms with fewer than 200 employees - an increasing trend over the last

Only one in four moved straight into a permanent post immediately after graduating. Those with applied science degrees, including engineering, were almost twice as likely than others to be in continuous permanent employment over the first three years.

Helen Connor, project director at the institute, said that temporary work was often a route into a permanent job for less well-qualified graduates. Some three-quarters found employment in the service sector including a third in publicly funded organisations. Teaching was the biggest single category.

Three years after leaving university, graduates were earning a wide range of salaries. Only one in ten was paid more than £20,000 a year with five out of ten receiving less than £14,000. The highest salaries were carned by those with mathematics and information-technology degrees.

Three years after graduation four out of five considered their job to be broadly at graduate level, but only just over a half said that a degree was a formal entry requirement.

More than half considered themselves "under-employed", including one-quarter who thought that they were "very under-employed Ms Connor said the survey. which covered 1.000 former students at the University of Sussex, found that the jobs market had become more polarised with some degree holders continuing to find highly skilled, well-paid secure jobs, while large numbers had to make do with lower-skilled, often temporary employment, at least initially. Richard Pearson, director of the institute, said that the situation was the result of the move towards a mass higher education system with a bigger, more diverse student popula-

In some cases graduates were displacing less-qualified candidates and adding new value to the jobs. In other cases, however, they felt "frustrated" because they believed that their university training was not being fully used.

neering defeats for the programme in six parliamentary committees, successfully nego-

of protest from business leaders and the political centre, since the success of Italy's austerity programme depends on keeping in-

This in turn provoked howls tiated a looser deal.

Italy's Olive Tree coalition begins to crack

ANDREW GUMBEL

Having taken 50 years to reach power, one might have thought the Italian left would be content to govern in peace, concentrate on lasting the full five-year parliamentary term, introduce real and lasting reforms, and above all avoid the kind of fratricidal inter-party squabbling that undid so many coalition governments in the bad old days of the

None of the winners of dispute that aim, at least in theory. But the spectacle of Italian politics over the past week or so tells a very different story: brought up with the culture of the old system, the centre-left parties who make up the governing Olive Tree coalition just cannot seem to resist lunging for each other's throats. It is as though the old rhythm of Italian politics, whereby governments would start falling apart within a few weeks and collapse in less than a year, was

April's general election would still ticking inside politicians heads. The main governing party, the left-wing PDS, is split over the future direction of the party. The Communist far left is successfully applying pres-sure on the government over the economy, to the fury of the centre. And the centre itself cannot decide if it wants to stay indefinitely in the ruling coalition or else try to establish a revamped version of the old Christian Democrat party. The result of these disputes is for a depressing spectacle when the government is barely out of the starting blocks, "The honeymoon is over," Prime Minister Romano Prodi admitted yesterday. "Usually such things

last six months, but in our case

we got no more than five weeks." Partly, the rifts have been brought on by difficult policy decisions, but partly they have been self-inflicted. The trouble began within the PDS, which waited no more than a few weeks after its historic election victory to start arguing about the best way to shed the last vestiges of its Communist past.

One faction, led by Deputy Prime Minister Walter Veltroni. advocates converting the Olive Tree coalition into an Italian equivalent of the United States Democrat Party. The PDS's secretary, Massimo D'Alema, meanwhile, wants to dump the hammer-and-sickle insignia in the party logo and broaden its outlook, but he has insisted on maintaining separate identities for the left and the centre

This might seem an arcane argument, and would no doubt have created few waves had the PDS still been in opposition, but coming from the ranks of the government in the volatile political culture of modern Italy, it is proving unnervingly divisive.

Then, in the early days of last week, came the first serious policy dispute, over the economy. Mr Prodi presented a two-year programme intended to rein in the country's calamitous public finances and prepare as rapidly as possible for European monctary union. Almost immediately, the far-left Rifondazione flation under control. The numhers involved were scarcely Comunista, on which the government depends to make up a shocking - the dispute was over majority in the Chamber of a 3 per cent versus a 2.5 per cent ceiling for wage rises – but the Deputies, objected to planned political fall-out was palpable. wage constraints on public sec-It was a chastened Mr Prodi. tor workers and, after engi-

"I too can sense the rise in temperature." he said, "but this is an old fever contracted during the old days which can no longer do so much harm because we now have new antibodies." Then he added: "The truce is over, and from now on we can count only on ourselves."

Kohl's 'Wunderkind' takes a risk too far

IMRE KARACS Bonn

An unpaid telephone bill for 10.375. Hong Kong dollars (£885) and a flurry of bouncing cheques have punctured the reputation of Germany's most successful young entrepreneur. the "Wunderkind" held up by Chancellor Helmut Kohl as the ideal role model for the nation's youth.

Lars Windhorst, 19-year-old founder of a trading company spanning the globe, was de-scribed by Mr Kohl earlier this year as the kind of teenager Germany needs: "Eighteenand nineteen-year-olds who don't count on their pensions, but follow their dreams, take risks and go out into the world."

Mr Windhorst has certainly done that, setting up offices in the Far East, competing with the Asian Tigers in their own jungle. He has taken risks, too, and, it seems, some liberties. According to reports in the German press, Mr Windhorst's DM300m (£131m) empire may be no more than a Potemkin village, constructed out of flimsy balance sheets that have masked the true value of his holdings.

Mr Windhorst, under investigation for his accounting practices, denies he is experiencing cash-flow problems. Failure to settle the phone bill of his Hong Kong office was an oversight, he says; the dishonoured cheques the result of a mix-up. But Stern photograph of a bank statement revealing the lamentable finances of the Far East subsidiary, reports that the account has been dipping into the red since March. "Has the Windhorst bubble burst?" the German press wonders, and has Mr Windhorst been entirely truthful about his company's finances? One thing appears certain: the 55-storey Windhorst Tower, to be erected in Ho Chi Minh City, has not yet received planning permission

Windhorst: Denies he has cash-flow problems

- a fact Mr Windhorst omitted to mention when he touted the project in Bonn in January.

Whether Mr Windhorst is an innocent victim of the deteriorating terms of trade or, as the German press suggests, a hypemerchant finally exposed, the controversy is highly embar-rassing to Mr Kohl. Mr Windthe Chancellor on his Far East tour last November, He was the young man everybody wanted to meet: a living proof of the spirit of free enterprise nurtured by the conservative government.

Mr Windhorst had the sort of CV hudding tycoons could only dream of. The son of a shopkeeper, at the age of 10 Lars was reading the business daily Handelsblan. He launched his career in high finance by investing his pocket money into shares. By the age of 14 he was building computers and writing software in his father's garage in the north German town of Rahden. A year later he flew to China to buy cheap computer components which were then assembled by his schoolmates and sold in his father's stationery shop. At 16 the boy dropped out of school and went into business with a Chinese entrepreneur based in Germany.

In the past three years the cottage industry has mushroomed into a world-wide concern, with offices in Wall Street and Hong Kong, interests in property, computers, advertising and business consultancy, and an estimated annual turnover of DM300m. He had become, in the words of a Hong Kong fan, a "one-man economic miracle". Or maybe not. If the Windhorst empire collapses, many Germans will draw the depressing conclusion that economic miracles no longer happen in their country, and Mr Kohl might have to start advisdelegation that accompanied keep paying those pension

Chechen civilians pay the price of Russian air raids

Doctors operating on some of the 72 civilians wounded at the weekend in Russian air attacks on the Chechen town of Gekhi in which 15 locals to bury their dead. Witnesses saw four burned-out Russian armoured vehicles. Some 32 Chechen fighters were reported killed in the four-day battle. The upsurge in fighting has contrasted starkly with President Boris Yeltsin's pledges to end the war

Mugabe set to marry his former secretary

Harare, Zimbabwe (AP) — while his first wife, Sally, was still President Robert Mugabe plans alive. Sally Mugabe died in a church wedding next month. to his former secretary, the state-controlled Sunday Mail

Grace Marufu is already married to Mugabe under African traditional law that allowed him to take her as a junior wife

1991 of a chronic kidney ailment. Marufu, 42, and Mugabe, 72, have a daughter, year-old Bona, and a son, 7year-old Robert Jr. Mugabe's only child by Sally died in in-pa, head of the Roman Catholic church in Zimbabwe, confirmed that preparations were being made for a mid-August wedding. Mugabe's rul-ing Zimbabwe African National Union Patriotic Front was expected to make the event a gala national celebration.

Reports of a planned church has smoothed over differences with Catholic leaders who had criticized his relationship with Marufu. Three journalists were convicted of "criminal defamation" for reporting last year that Mr Mugabe and Ms Marufu

O Call the TSB Mortgage

QUOTATION LI

@ Go hunt that house

Find out what you can borrow, BEFORE hunting. The call is free, the quote is free, so why not ring TSB PhoneBank for more information quoting reference IH1.

CALL 0500758000

Mortgages

by the Bank as security. Applicants must be aged 18 or over All loans subject to status, her are are in the Channel the on request by calling 0500 758 000. TSB Bank plc and TSB Bank Sociand polyregic and SFAI are repres Marketing Group which is requisited by the Personal Investment Authority only for TSB tile insurance occupies, and mass and distance investments. Advice or recis of that Group, TSB Bank plo, Victoria House, Victoria Square, 9 milegram 81, 182. Registered in England and Vales, Number, 1089268, TSB Bank Scotland plc, Henry Duncan House, 120 George Street, Earthurgh Ein 2 4LH, Reg stered in Scotland, Number, 95237

YOUR HOME IS AT RISK IF YOU DO NOT KEEP UP REPAYMENTS ON A MORTGAGE

on 0800 77 99 55.

Prime Health

Would your health insurance company treat you like this?

	Gall Prime Health on 0800 77 99 55, or fill in the coupon
	TitleFirst	oame
	PLEASE LIE SLOCK CATTALLS
	Surname	Date of birth :
	Address
		Postcode
	Phone (inc. STD code) Day.	Evening
	Date of birth of the eldest person requiring cover
	if you aiready have privat please state renewal date
1.17	Please post to (no stamp required) Prime Health Limited, FREEPOST,
	SK 3042 Stockport, Cheshi	-

Tetchy Chirac defends record

MARY DEJEVSKY

France celebrated its national holiday, Bastille Day, yesterday with the traditional military parade, presidential address. champagne and fireworks, but without the confidence and singleness of national purpose that had marked last year's festivities one month after Jacques Chirac's inauguration as President. Even the weather conspired to depress the mood, with sombre skies dimming the luminous colours of the parade. The South African President, Nelson Mandela, was warmly applauded as guest of honour, but he walked with difficulty up the steps to his place in the official stand, and looked frail after standing - like his host for the best part of the 90-minute spectacle The final event of the military parade, a joint flypast by French and British air force planes above the Champs Ebsecs, also had something bitter-sweet. For the British, it was a singular

Presidents Mandela and Chirac celebrate Bastille Day

coup for the RAF to be invited to take part in the Bastille Day parade, and the first time any foreign force had done so outside the joint Eurocorps. The small contingent of Harriers and Tornados flying in perfect formation cut a particular dash after a display dominated by

In France, however, the participation of the eight British planes underlined not just the growing military co-operation with Britain, but the imminence of changes to France's military structures and the diminution of its self-sufficiency in defence.

Even the usually placed and optimistic President Chirac could not overcome the general mood. Although he gave his address in the form of a live television interview from a specially constructed bower in the leafy grounds of the Elysée Palace, his message was downbeat and betrayed a slight tetchiness. Rather than rallying his fellow countrymen to greater things, Mr Chirac found himself mounting an awkward, point-bypoint defence of his record - especially on the proliferation of political corruption cases and independence. "As long as I am in office," he said, "justice will be done and will be the same for all." He added, however, that the current spate of corruption cases in France showed that "times have changed, and morality is more

the question of judicial demanding".

Mr Chirac also felt the need to shield his Prime Minister, Alain Juppé, who had come in for renewed criticism in the previous week, including a strong call for his removal in a Le Monde newspaper editorial "in order to protect the presidency". Comparing his stated goals with his actual achievements (on jobs and social division for example), the paper said that the adjective he had used against the record of his predecessor, Edouard Balladur, could now be turned on him: "calamitous".

Yesterday. Mr Chirac said defensively that if the government had not been up to its task, he would have drawn the relevant conclusions and said Mr Juppé had done "the best possible job in very difficult

If Mr Juppe was spared, however, a whole collection of others were chided: the banks for keeping interest rates too high, the previous government for not monitoring the banks closely enough (and so precipitating the crises at Credit Lyonnais and Credit Foncier); MPs of the governing coalition for not being dynamic and positive enough; MPs of the opposition for not being "imaginative" enough, and the judiciary for moving

Son's corpse exhumed in Menem family feud

PHIL DAVISON Latin America Correspondent

Carlitos (Little Carlos) Menem always liked to travel in style. Playboy son of Argentina's President, he drove racing cars and flew his own helicopter.

Despite his father's wealth, he never really made it on the track. Judging by the official report on his death, he was not the greatest of helicopter pilots ei-ther. He flew into a high-volt-age power line in March last year, ending his life at the age

That's the official version. His mother insists he was murdered, that the helicopter was shot down. And she implies that his father, the country's presi-dent and her ex-husband, Carlos Menem, was either involved or at least knew who did it.

The mother, Zulema Yoma, has never really explained why Carlos senior or his aides should have had his son and heir killed. She has talked vaguely of "shutting him up for political rea-sons" or involvement by narco-traffickers.

Many Argentines think she is mentally unstable, a line pushed by Mr Menem himself, although usually with the eu-phemistic coda: "She's going through the pain of a bereaved mother."

The couple, both originally from the same small town in Syria, went through a messy divorce last year after the presi-dent threw her out of the

At dawn on Friday, Little Carlos travelled in style for the last time. Dug up from the Muslim cemetery at San Justo, on the outskirts of Buenos Aires, his body was driven with a 40-vehicle police escort to the capital's morgue.

Ever since his death, his topsy to prove her murder the-ory. She said she also wanted to be sure the body buried was really that of her son. President Menem, always insisting it was an accident, finally relented and allowed the exhumation and autopsy by 30 experts in the presence of a federal judge.

After 16 months in the grave, some doubt reigned as to whether the body would be in condition for a fruitful examination. The experts decided it was and studied it for four hours with Mrs Yoma's lawyers present. She herself remained outside, still insisting her son death was "sabotage that began at the presidential palace".

Earlier, she told reporters that Carlitos had received death threats in the weeks before the crash. She and her daughter Zulemita (Little Zulema). 26, who as stand-in First Lady came close to upstaging the Princess of Wales with a miniskirted appearance by her fa-ther's side in Buenos Aires last November, had received similar threats, she said.

"It also took 50 minutes to get Carlitos to a hospital whereas it usually takes only eight minutes. He was left unattended for 30 minutes while still alive. And when the life-support machine was switched off, we were not consulted," she said.

Mr Menem, telling friends he was disgusted by the whole affair, left town for the weekend for his home province of La

After the autopsy, Carlitos's body was returned to the grave. Or, rather, another grave. Mrs Yoma insisted her boy be re-buried not in the Muslim cemetery with Mr Menem's relatives but next to his maternal grandmother. The experts made no comment after the autopsy. saying they would issue their findings in a fortnight or so.

APR 10.9%. ROVER 6181. CASH PRICE  £15,441. DEPOSIT £4,777. AMOUNT OF CREDIT £10,664. 24 MONTHLY PAYMENTS

APR 10.770. ROVER 0101. CASH TWO IN GOOD CONDITION, EXAMPLE ASSUMES ANNUAL MILEAGE UP TO 12000 MILES.  PRICE CORRECT AT TIME OF PRINTING PARTICIPATING PRINTING PARTICIPATING PARTICIPATING PARTICIPATING DEALERS ONLY. SEE YOUR LOCAL DEALER FOR DETAILS, IF YOU'RE NOT SURE WHERE TO FIND HIM, RING 0345 186 186. + WARRANTY OFFER AVAILABLE FOR TWO IN A MEMBER OF NATWEST GROUP. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST. AT PARTICIPATING DEALERS ONLY. SEE YOUR LOCAL DEALER FOR DETAILS, IF YOU'RE NOT SURE WHERE TO FIND HIM, RING 0345 186 186. + WARRANTY OFFER AVAILABLE FOR TWO IN A MEMBER OF NATWEST GROUP. WRITTEN QUOTATIONS AVAILABLE ON REQUEST. AT PARTICIPATING DEALERS ONLY. SEE YOUR LOCAL DEALER FOR DETAILS.

international

Israel in turmoil: US visit leaves few options for talks as ultra-religious Jews increase pressure on holy city's secular population

Sabbath riot on the road to orthodoxy

PATRICK COCKBURN

"It is the Sabbath for you too," shouted a black-coated ultra-orthodox young man as he waved his fist at a helicopter flying over Bar-Ilan street in Jerusalem on Saturday evening. A few migutes later, ultra-orthodox te lagers dragged a man in a red helmet off his motorcycle as he demonstrated his right to drive down Bar-Ilan, a much-used main road in Jerusalem, during the Sabbath.

The battle to close the road is at the centre of the struggle between religious and secular Israelis, because it bisects two deeply religious districts in Jerusalem. In the wake of their successes in the may elections. the ultra-orthodox, or Haredim, hope they will finally succeed in stopping traffic between dusk on Friday and dusk on Saturday.

"It will be closed within two months," predicted David, an ultra-orthodox, watching police horses trying to drive back demonstrators and onlookers. Secular Israelis fear he is right. Israel, the man who was knocked off his motorcycle, as he picked himself up to the jeers are being squeezed out of of onlookers, said: "I know it Jerusalem, where a growing is my duty as a citizen of proportion of the Jewish pop-

Jerusalem to drive here." Much of the violence during the riot came from the police. I was standing outside a clothes shop with some children from room flat for sale "for religious the neighbourhood when we were suddenly-attacked by the riot squad, one of whom grabbed me round the neck until he was restrained by one of his officers. Later we were use of electricity.

soaked by water cannon which drenched bystanders indis-

Avraham Ravitz, a member of the Knesset for the Torah Judaism party, said: "What happened tonight was a pogrom by blood-thirsty police officers. They beat children and pregnant women. I told them the protests would cease if they left but they just wanted to hit the

This is something of an exaggeration, but the police were extraordinarily aggressive. At one point, a senior policeman with a bullhorn shouted at us to get out of the way. "Relax," said an Israeli journalist. "I don't want to relax," the officer yelled back. A boy crossing the road was grabbed by police and dragged off shouting: "I want to go home! I want to go home!"

The anger of the Haredim was directed more at the police than secular demonstrators from the left-wing Meretz party. "If it wasn't for the police, all people would do is shout 'Shabbes, Shabbes' (Yiddish for the Sabbath) and throw a few stones," said a bystander. Secular Israelis believe they proportion of the Jewish pop-ulation are Haredim. A sign of the growing intolerance was a notice on a lamp-post in Bar-Ilan which advertised a threepeople only." It comes complete with "a Shabbat elevator", which operates automatically, so the user does not have to press the button and make forbidden

After the deluge: An ultra-orthodox Israeli shouts at police as he is drenched by a Photograph: Guy Marinovich / AP water cannon during Saturday's riot in Jerusalem

Netanyahu may have misplayed US hand

Jerusalem — Binyamin Netanyahu returned to Israel yesterday after spelling out to President Clinton the depth of the differences between the US and the new Israeli Prime Minister. He left little doubt that even if he cannot undo the Oslo accords with the Palestinians, he regards them as a mistake. "It is not the beginning of a beau-tiful friendship," said an Israeli newspaper.

The sharp divisions between the US and Israel are obscured because it is in the interests of neither side to publicise them. Mr Netanyahu knows Israelis like their leaders to get on with the US and Mr Clinton does not want a quarrel with Israel that would alienate his Jewish supporters just before the presidential election.

For all his vaunted knowledge of American politics, Mr Netanyahu may have made a mistake. By underlining his differences with the White House and courting Congress, he may have permanently alien-ated Mr Clinton, who is a more dangerous opponent than he looks - as both George Bush and Newt Gingrich have discovered.

Even before Mr Netanyahu left for the US, hopes were waning among Israelis who sup-ported Oslo that he would water down the hard ideological positions he had taken during the election. "I need at least three cups of coffee in the morning to believe that Bibi's tough line is tactical," said a gloomy Israeli official. His gloom stemmed from the conviction that, for practical purposes, the peace process which started in 1993 is over. Mr Netanyahu says he will not compromise with the Pales-tinians on Jerusalem, Israeli settlements or Palestinian statehood. This leaves very little to discuss. Given that he also will not discuss the return of the Golan to Syria there is little chance of negotiations with Syrian president Hafez al-Assad. Optimists in Jerusalem think fore this settlement assault."

ings, assassinations, small wars,

There is little left to discuss with the Palestinians, writes Patrick Cockburn

there is still room for compro-mise. They argue that if Israel pulls out of most of Hebron – as it is pledged to do - and revives the economy of the West Bank and Gaza by allowing Palestinian labourers to work in Israel, then a modus vivendi might be reached between Mr Netanyahu and Yasser Arafat, the Palestinian leader, which could last for the next four years.

Netanyahu: He may regret alienating Bill Clinton

The problem with this view is that it ignores the lesson of the last four years. There are so many friction points between Palestinians and Israelis that some crisis is bound to ignite.

Only yesterday, Jewish settlers said they planned to triple their numbers under Mr Netanyahu, an intention decried by Palestinians as a catastrophe in the making, Hasan Asfour, director of the Palestine Liberation Organisation's peace negotiating office, responded:
"I do not think the Palestinian people will stand handcuffed be-

Whatever the relative intentions of the Israelis and Palestinians, their relations are determined largely by bomb-

or what in Northern Ireland is called "the politics of the last atrocity". If there is no momentum towards peace, then the two sides move inevitably towards confrontation.

The likelihood of crisis will be exacerbated by Mr Netanyahu's style of government. Negotiations with the Palestinians were previously handled by the foreign ministry, with hundreds of experienced officials. But Mr Netanyahu prefers everything to go through his own hands and a small and inexperienced kitchen cabinet. He distrusts civil service officials and army officers active in implementing and negotiating Oslo. This makes it much more difficult to defuse any unexpected crisis. Nowhere is Mr Netanyahu's inexperience more in evidence than in dealing with Syria. His staff have spoken of "Lebanon First", meaning an agreement for Israel to leave southern Lebanon. But having caught Israel in a lobster pot in Lebanon, there is no reason for President Assad to let Mr Netanyahu escape.

The second, and more carefully pondered, string to Israeli policy in Lebanon is to retaliate for Hizbollah guerrilla attacks with air or artillery strikes against the Syrian army. But as Professor Moshe Ma'oz. a specialist on Syria at the Hebrew University, points out: " President Assad is extremely tough. Syria is good at this type of attritional warfare.

Mr Netanyahu won the election by promising Israelis better personal security in the wake of the four suicide bombs in February and March, which killed 63 people in Israel. The irony of his present policy is that he can only make good on this promise if he co-operates with Syria and the Palestinians. Israeli security alone cannot stop

GUARANTEED MINIMUM FUTURE VALUE*/FINAL PAYMENT £7,900. CHARGE FOR CREDIT £2,013. TOTAL PAYABLE £17,454. LIVERY TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATES AND IZ MONTHS BOAD TAX EMBET AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED IS OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED) THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 435 STRATFORD ROAD, SHIRLEY, SOLIHULL, 890 4BL.

WHICHEVER TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATES AND IZ MONTHS BOAD TAX EMBET AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED IS OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED) THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 435 STRATFORD ROAD, SHIRLEY, SOLIHULL, 890 4BL.

WHICHEVER COMES FIRST, THESE SCHEDULED SERVICING FOR TWO YEARS OR 24,000 MILES, WHICHEVER COMES FIRST, FREE SERVICING AND WARRANTY OFFER ONLY AVAILABLE ON VEHICLES PURCHASED ON ROVER SELECT. OFFER AVAILABLE UNTIL 30.9 96

ON OF £395.) SUBJECT TO VEHICLE AVAILABLETTE. CHIVERY TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATES AND IZ MONTHS BOAD TAX, CHEEK AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED IS OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED) THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 435 STRATFORD ROAD, SHIRLEY, SOLIHULL, 890 4BL.

CHIVERY TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATES AND IZ MONTHS BOAD TAX, CHEEK AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED IS OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED) THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 435 STRATFORD ROAD, SHIRLEY, SOLIHULL, 890 4BL.

CHIVERY TO DEALER, NUMBER PLATES AND IZ MONTHS BOAD TAX, CHEEK AVAILABLE TO ANYONE AGED IS OR OVER, SUBJECT TO STATUS (A GUARANTEE MAY BE REQUIRED) THROUGH ROVER FINANCE LTD, AVON HOUSE, 435 STRATFORD ROAD, SHIRLEY, SOLIHULL, 890 4BL.

Apartheid-era arms deals haunt new regime

Johannesburg

it must rate among the great ironies of South Africa's post apartheid cra. This week Thabo Mbeki, the country's Deputy President, leads a delegation to the United States which will attempt to persuade Washington to drop a court action against Armscor. South Africa's national arms company, for alleged sanctions busting in the 1980s.

If Mr Mbeki fails, President Nelson Mandela's government could find itself in the odd position of having to stand up in a US court to defend Armscor. a principal instrument of op-pression under apartheid, over leased from prison.

"We are being asked to take responsibility for the sins of a previous discredited regime," said an Mbeki spokesman at the weekend. The South African government argues that America should abandon the case. But Washington insists it cannot interfere in the process of a 1991 indictment against Armscor through the US courts. PW Botha, leader of the government under which the sanctions-busting is claimed to have taken place, must be smirking at the political impasse

The US indictment claims that Armscor, set up in 1977 to circumvent the United Nation's arms embargo against South Africa and wholly owned by the South African government, smuggled military technology from the US in the late 1980s. Evidence of the embargo breaches turned up during the Gulf war when the US parts were allegedly discovered in South African shells which had been sold to Iraq.

Large scale arms deals between South Africa and Iraq were alleged in a 1994 court acreached by two parties he never did care for - Mr Mandela's a Palestinian businessman, for "crimes" committed before African National Congress and breach of contract against Arm-President Mandela was even re-the US government. breach of contract against Arm-scor. He claimed South Africa had sold $4.5bn (£3bn) of equipment to Saddam Hussein during the Iran-Iraq war. Shady South African arms deals also featured in the Scott inquiry, Britain's investigation into its own arms to Iraq scandal.

The US is demanding that Armscor - and therefore the Mandela government - pay more than 35m rand in compensation or agree to US surveillance of its arms facilities. Pretoria is "insulted" at the implication that it cannot be trusted to monitor Armscor's activities in the new democratic South Africa. It has also rejected an American suggestion contest" in court and pay a re-duced fine. Mbeki officials say this would still involve South Africa submitting to the juris-diction of US courts. This, like the suggested US surveillance, would undermine the country's

The dispute has threatened to sour relations between the two countries. Even a direct appeal from Mr Mandela to President Bill Clinton has failed to solve the crisis. South African ministers have threatened to reveal details of clandestine deals between the US and previous South African governments or suspend the Binational Com-mission between South Africa commercial and academic exchanges between the two countries, if the US does not drop the Armscor case.

Ronnie Kasrils, deputy defence minister, has aired South African defence industry suspicions that the US's real motive is to keep the country out of the lucrative international arms market. South Africa's arms industry claims it has lost deals worth billions of rand because of the continuing US ban on mil-itary technology to the country despite the lifting of the 20-year UN embargo in 1994. The continuing US ban is believed to have played a major role in South Africa losing its bid to sell to Britain last year. The Mandela government is attempting to reform Armscor. Earlier this year, Mr Justice Edward Cameron, chairman of a government-appointed commission into Armscor's activities, concluded that during the apartheid era "there was almost not a dirty scrap of the world where South African arms did not turn up..." The commission urged the "complete overhaul" of South Africa's armaments policies and its national arms industry and recommended Parliament authorise all future arms exports. The report, which also suggested that Armscor's board of directors be dismissed.

that it make a special plea of "no and the US, which promotes 91 Rooivalk combat helicopters led to a new government arms contest" in court and now a contest." sales policy being introduced two months ago. Armscor claims there has been a major overhaul of its personnel and practices but critics claim too many old faces and shady business practices remain in place.

The Armscor dispute is not on the official agenda for this week's meeting of the Binational Commission, co-chaired by Mr Mbeki and the US Vice President. Al Gore. An Mbeki spokesman was at first cry about reports that Armsoor was top of the private agenda. But he admitted that an advance party of officials. charged with thrashing out a sclution to the problem, had already left for the US.

Dole digs pits for himself to fall into

RUPERT CORNWELL Washington

This was when his presidential campaign was supposed to roll. Instead, Republican candidate Bob Dole has inflicted upon himself a new series of small disasters, horrifying his advisers and prompting a number of Congressional Republicans to break ranks with their nominee to avoid being dragged down to defeat this autumn.

In the first week of July. Mr Dole succeeded in deepening his party's split over abortion and getting on the wrong side of the smoking argument by suggesting that tobacco might not neccessarily be addictive. Now he has dug two more pits and fallen into each of them: first by resurrecting the controversy over the ban on assault weapons, which is a sure winner for President Bill Clinton, and then by seeming to snuh the country's leading black organisation.

Publicly, the Dole camp insists it was a "scheduling problem" that prevented him addressing the annual conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) in North Carolina last week. There matters might have rested - until Mr Dole said he feared he was being "set up" for

The consequence, as so often in Mr Dole's rambling mode of stump politics, was to turn a minor squall into a tempest. made only fiercer by criticism from arguably the two most popular Republicans in the country, the former Congressman and Cabinet member Jack Kemp, and retired General Colin Powell. Indeed, "disappointment" at

Mr Dole's no-show seems only to have hardened General Powell's determination to stay as clear of the 1996 campaign as possible. That he would refuse to be Mr Dole's vice-presidential running mate has been a foregone conclusion for months. Now he has made it clear that he will not campaign actively for Mr Dole, and has no desire to play a feature role at next month's nominating convention in San Diego.

Given the pressure being put upon him by anxious Republican leaders, General Powell has little choice but to speak in San Diego. But the fuss around him only draws attention from Mr Dole, and reminds voters of what might have been, had he not decided last November against making his own bid for the White House.

The poils only confirm the Republicans' sorry state. The a hostile reception at the tradi-tionally pro-Democrat NAACP. gives Mr Clinton a virtually unchanged lead of 15 per cent. State by state, the picture is even more disheartening, with Mr Clinton far ahead in 25 states that would give him 315 electoral college votes, more than the 270 needed to win. In every key swing state in the Midwest except Michigan, Mr Clinton leads by 12 per cent or more. Even in normal Republican strongholds such as Florida and Texas, the President is neck-and-neck with Mr Dole. So dire has been Mr Dole's performance that even his former colleagues in Congress are showing signs of rebellion. Mr Dole had hoped to make welfare reform a major issue this autumn. Instead Republican Congressmen have agreed to a compromise bill meeting Mr Clinton's requirements, that may be passed and signed by the President within the month.

If Mr Dole cannot get a grip on his campaign, some predict rebellion could spread to the convention itself. "Bob Dole has run for President three times and still hasn't learnt how," the conservative commentator George Will said yesterday. Another four weeks like the last four, and "there could be serious insurrection in San Diego".

SIGNIFICANT SHORTS

The getaway car used by bombers who killed 19 American servicemen in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia last month has been found. The white Chevrolet Caprice Classic was found in Dammam, 10kms from Dhahran. After the blast on 25 June, which also wounded hundreds of people, officials said the bombers had been spotted fleeing in a white Caprice Classic – the most popular car model in the kingdom. Gulf newspapers reported at the time that witnesses gave Saudi investigators a "good description" of two of the bombers. AP ~ Riyadh

German opposition Social Democrat politicians and members of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's own party in the Bundesrat (upper house) threatened to block the landmark austerity programme passed last month by the lower house of parliament, calling it unjust and a threat to job creation programmes in eastern Germany. Warning that cost-cutting is essential to reviving the country's economy, Mr Kohl's conservative coalition pushed cuts in sick pay, unemployment benefits and health care through the Bundestag on 28 June. AP - Bonn prance will ask the UN Security Council to give Nato peace troops in Bosnia a precise mandate to arrest indicted war criminals, Defence Minister Charles Millon said. "The arrest of war criminals does not come under the mandate that was given to I-For. For that reason France will use all available means to [get] the Security Council to deliberate without delay a procedure to be established so that war criminals are pursued and arrested," he said during a visit to the Bosnian capital Sarajevo. Reuter - Sarajevo

A Romanian mayor and an ethnic Hungarian senator, both rival nationalists, were chosen by their respective parties to run for president in Romania's autumn elections. The Romanian National Unity Party elected its leader, Gheorghe Funar, as its candidate, while the Hungarian Democratic Union of Romania chose Gyorgy Frunda to contest the poll on 3 November. President Ion Iliescu, who has not so far announced his candidacy, remains favourite

An investigation into South African police corruption has resulted in about 100 people including senior police officers being charged. The acting national commissioner, Morgan Chetty, said those arrested included two fraud squad detectives, two police superintendents and civilians who allegedly paid bribes. The 800 cases under investigation include crimes of drug trafficking, vehicle theft, arms smuggling and sales of police files. Reuter – Johannesburg

European Union foreign ministers will debate
Eretaliatory steps against Washington today if President Bill Clinton enforces a US law penalising foreign companies doing business in Cuba. "It's a subject that is exercising minds on both sides of the Atlantic," said a diplomatic source ahead of an EU foreign ministers meeting today. The official said all 15 EU governments oppose the Helms-Burton Act. Today is the deadline for Mr Clinton to waive the provision that penalises foreign firms for benefiting from US property confiscated when Fidel Castro seized power in 1959. AP – Brussels

Police at Berlin's "Love Parade" praised the behaviour of the 750,000-strong crowd. The eighth annual festival of techno music and dance passed off without serious trouble. After Saturday's parade police detained only 34 people, for minor offences. Reuter – Berlin utterly contradictory ways of looking at the evolution of race relations in America since the civil rights movement of the Sixties. Each is equally plausible. You can point to the OJ Simpson affair and the Louis Farrakhan phenomenon as evidence of the country's abysmal failure to achieve Martin Luther King's dream of colour-blind

Seattle's first black mayor cleans up a white city

Or you can point to the rise of the black middle class: the number of black doctors and lawyers has more than tripled in the last three decades, and the number of black mayors has risen from below 50 in 1970 to more than 300 today.

If you are looking for one example to argue the thesis that there is more to admire than to despise in America's handling of the race question, then look less cherished notion of white real home lies, he made a bet

no further than Norman Rice, one of half a dozen Americans singled out as "heroes" by President Clinton in his last State of the Union address.

Elected Seattle's first black mayor in 1989, Mr Rice was reelected with a hugely increased majority in 1993 and is now running for governor of Washington state. What is remarkable here is that Seattle, unlike other major American cities with black mayors, has an overwhelmingly white population. Only 10 per cent of Seattle residents are black. Which puts to rest the notion cherished by some of America's more radical black leaders that their white compatriots are constitutionally incapable of setting skin colour aside and judging people on merit. In the same way that it shatters the no-

LOCAL HEROES

No 25: Norman Rice

bigots that black people cannot, to coin a phrase, run a bath. Mr Rice is wildly popular in his constituency, viewed by black and white alike with something of the pride all South Africans take in Nelson Mandela. During his tenure as may-or, Seattle, a magnet for Californian migrants in recent years. has been described in survey after survey as the number one American city in which to live. Unapologetically all-American, not one to indulge in the fancy that Africa is where his last year with the mayor of Cleveland that the Seattle rain, Seattle is the perfect place Mariners baseball team would beat the Cleveland Indians. Mr Rice lost. His stake? Ten pounds of Pacific Northwest salmon - which he delivered to his Cleveland counterpart in a small ceremony last month.

Mr Rice could afford to be gracious; he is a man more accustomed to winning than to losing. Apart from his electoral victories on home turf, last year he was voted president of the US Conference of Mayors and, in a no less celebrated coup, went on to win the title of America's "Funniest Mayor" on an HBO television charity show featuring Whoopi Goldberg and Robin Williams, Cracking jokes about Seattle's notoriously high rainfall, he manipulated his voice to gurgle as if he were to live. To a prosperous city bountifully blessed with natural charms - mountains, forests, lakes and ocean - Mr Rice has helped add a high quality of life. While keeping a tight rein on the city coffers, he has made Seattle's streets and public transport the cleanest of any large American urban centre. He has brought crime down - it fell by 14 per cent in 1994 - and won Seattle a national prize for its success in dealing with the

If the people of Seattle are proud of him, it is in large measure because of the pride he takes in his job. In an interview a few years ago he lyrically described his passion for the city. "I want Seattle's children to feel their linkages to water and weather," he said, "to sense problems of the homeless.

wins his battles

the unfathomable power of salmon returning to spawn after years at sea, to have mountains and forests as anchors in their souls."

John Carlin

Have you had an accident in the last 3 years? Was someone else at fault? Find out free about claiming compensation.

No Win - No Legal Fee* often available. Freefone 0800 444240 (day and night)

National Accident Helpline

break in London

The fashionable, 5 star Athenaeum Hotel and Apartments is ideally positioned on Piccadilly ust a few minutes walk from the Royal Academy of Arts. Our winner and their guest will enjoy two hotel's Health Spa plus details. So call: two tickets to the 228th Summer Exhibition.

ATHENÆUM HOTEL & APARTMENTS

nights in a luxurious room This prize is worth over with breakfast and dinner £1000. To enter, simply at the acclaimed restaurant dial the number below, Bullochs at 116. The answer the two questions winner will also enjoy the on line and leave your Calls cost 39p/man cheap rate, 49p/min all other times. Winner picked at random after lines close 18th July, 96. Usual Newspaper Publishing rules apply. Editors decision is final Prize subject to availability, must be taken before 18/08/96.

Midland Bank NOTICE TO CARDHOLDERS

Midland Bank plc announces the following reduction in its Gold Visa interest rate.

EFFECTIVE FROM (and including) 22 JULY 1996

Monthly Interest Rate	APR Purchases (fee exc.)	APR Cash (fee exc.)
1.1% (from 1.3%)	14.0%*	15.7%*
Monthly Interest Rate	APR Purchases (fee inc.)	APR Cash (fee inc.)
1.1% (trom 1.3%)	15.3%*	17.1%*

- * Typical APR for purchases/advances based on a credit limit of £3000.
- Terms & Conditions will be varied accordingly with effect from the date above.

MIDLAND BANK p(c; POULTRY, LONDON EC2P-2BX)

COUNTY

PBUS a once only enrotment fee of £9.50 waived it you join by Direct Debit. Cars register 1317/87 are subject to additional fee of £12.50. £26.50 is inclusive of a 10% saving on Recr.

Murdoch puts England in the second division

To some readers the fate of 15 men and an ovoid ball may not vaunted commercial abilities of Rupert seem compelling. The shenanigans among rugby's rulers might seem a boys' affair, albeit in the case of the (English) Rugby Football Union grown men behaving as boys - badly. From next season England is out of one of the great tournaments in the national sporting calendar, the Five Nations rugby tournament. In selling television rights to British Sky Broadcasting it apparently forgot that the matches people most want to watch are between it and the other countries, Wales, France, Ireland and Scotland. These nations have not signed and have no intention of abandoning their existing television deal, even though Sky is waving its chequebook. The upshot is come the spring there will be no tournament, no Triple Crown nor any of the rest of rugby's popular

The involvement in all this of Sky and its huge sums of money makes this more than just a question of sport.
There are unavoidable allegories here of the condition of modern Britain. Where are those vaunted qualities of phlegm, sportsmanship and a love of orderly procedure in public affairs? The evidence to hand exposes administrative cack-handedness, a wilful disregard of proper procedure and - not a new charge, this, sadly - hopeless short-sightedness. It also says someMurdoch and his television henchmen who have, it appears, come a cropper.

The Rugby Football Union - immortalised by Will Carling as the "old farts" signed an agreement with Sky for nearly £90m, the money to be channelled into paying for Twickenham stadium and pay for schools rugby coaches and so on. The RFU seems to have thought the agreement covered its home international matches. Sky had been banking on the other nations in the Five Nations set-up also signing up, at rates well in excess of what the BBC will pay.
How could the RFU have negotiated with Sky without ascertaining whether the other members of the Five Nations consortium would agree to England's idiosyncratic position? To have sought a deal that gave England a larger share of the cake is one thing - no one is saying the other Five Nations rugby officials come out of this looking anything but stiff-necked and recalcitrant. But to proceed without checking the status of England either within the Five Nations or with substitute competitors from, say, the Tri-Nation set-up down-under - verges on the incredible.

Though the deal might seem an achievement for Rupert Murdoch, Sky Television's moneybags have also demonstrated how lacking in quality and vision many leading sports administrators are. There is nothing wrong with more money; there is everything wrong with a duff bargain that might (this is the case made by Vernon Pugh of the Welsh Rugby Union and the International Board) thwart the longerterm expansion of a sport. Mr Murdoch - or his current representative on earth Mr Sam Chisholm - puff and the RFU ali fali down.

ONE CANADA SQUARE CANARY WHARF LONDON E145DL TELEPHONE 0171-293 2000 / 0171-345 2000 FAX 0171-298 2435 / 0171-345 2435

This is the age of big money and media contracts, when materialist professionalism is substituting for penurious amateurism. Much of what is happening is welcome. Company law may or may not be adequate to cope with Premiership clubs which are suddenly found in stock-exchange favour or successful rugby clubs such as Bath which have now hit the big time. But who is to say the way the leagues and the associations are run is either efficient or maintains any claims to democratic legitimacy?

Does the RFU really embody the will of rugby? Who speaks for rugby? Is it the players (and how to weight the claims of the amateurs and the would-be pros) or the club officials (oligarchs to a man)? What about the spectators, the people in the stands at Bath and Leicester, or those at home between England and also-ran teams.

willing the national side to win, feeling as much part of the sporting community as those actually present? It will never do to say that those who pay to view alone should call the shots. If Sky subscribers rule then the laws might as well be rewritten to accommodate commercial breaks every quarter of an hour.

But that turns the sport into a private affair, something to be bargained over by a big private corporation and clubs. It is not and must never be. There is a wider, public interest in the conduct of sports, just as there is in access to a certain category of events which embody the nation and its spirits and which deserve to be broadcast to the greatest number of people. Of course Great Britain will not fall apart if we are deprived of Scotland as England at Murrayfield or England vs Wales at Twickenham; but those cathartic, binding, passionate occasions do speak to something vital and enduring in the make up of this country.

It is a country about which the owner of Sky, Rupert Murdoch, seems to have very mixed feelings. Is he really the radical the actions of Sky would imply? Today he can contemplate how he has managed to have made fools of the upper echelons of English rugby union. His clients in the RFU can offer subscribers only second-rate rugby, with patched-together friendlies

Sky's great future hope - pay per view for all major events - is made to look vulnerable thanks in equal measure to the incompetence of England's rugby leadership and its own mistake in believing everyone has a money price at which they can be bought.

Local libraries on borrowed time

peports that public libraries are to Copen on Sundays will raise a wry laugh in many parts of the country where they seem barely to be open during the week.

One of the saddest manifestations of municipal decline has been what has happened to the local library, its stock shrunk and hours curtailed. Councils blame reductions in grants, with some justice; many local authorities have chosen to give priority to other services. But public libraries are one service used by everyone, high and low, clerical and manual, old and young. They ought to be at the leading edge of what councils can

Public libraries offer one of the strongest arguments for public spending in the general interest. But for that they have to be open, all day every day.

• LETTERS TO THE EDITOR •

Ireland will not be bullied into silence

Sir: We represent the silent voices of Ireland, the people that are in search of a better standard of living, an education for their children and the great mystery of a balsamic vinaigrette and mustard. We have left the politics of the Irish civil war far behind us.

You will probably find some of us working in Europe, administering medicine in your hospitals, teaching in your schools, designing your physical environment and making money for your financial institutions. Delights in our life may be as simple as fresh bread. ground coffee and the dream of a safe future to raise the next generation, as well as a return on our own investment of hard work and a refusal to emigrate too far from home, in order to change the history of poverty and emigration that has dogged our country.

We are saddened that so much credence is given to the men of aggression and so little to the boring communities of people who work at the core of society, who also vote in elections and whose entire future is held to ransom by the bullet and the men of politics.

Imagine for a moment the notion of a middle-class revolution. People simply ceasing to do what they do every day to make our society function and prosper until such time as the politicians understand that they should listen more carefully to the people for whom they work and to whom they should defer with a more proactive response to the northern problem.

Imagine for a moment that this generation of voices refuses to be silent and live as our parents have, bullied into silence and intimidated by poverty. Imagine us as a different type of people, Europeans and proud. ROISIN MURPHY EMMA KELLY

ir. The events of 12 July 1996 have placed the future of Northern Ireland in critical jeopardy. As a native of that country, I am appalled by both the actions of "loyalists" and the abject surrender of the British government in the face of intimidation and violence. In scenes reminiscent of Mussolini's march on Rome, loyalists have been permitted to stage triumphal pageants through Catholic areas while the police protected them. Fascism also achieved its ends by intimidating and violence. Most people outside Northern Ireland are unaware what an Orange parade is. They see images of peculiar costumes and banners, quaint if faintly absurd, and register a vague connection to entrenched tribalism. As "the Twelfth" went ahead this year, I even heard a radio reporter speak of "traditional parades", showing "no visible signs of triumphalism". Of course, "tradition" gives a dubious air of respectability. But an Orange march without triumphalism is like forest without trees.

the authorities with mass railies

The peace process is in ruins, nationalists more alienated than ever, and a much needed recovery for the economy destroyed by blazing cars and road docks And why? Because the powers of state were too cowardly to call bluff? Or merely because the present government's term of office is almost entirely decided by Unionist support?

Loyalism is doomed. They refuse to get their heads round the fact that most British people are sick of them. They burn their own shops and community centres in futile rage. Like the unstable child of a dysfunctional family, they throw tantrums. So why is the "parent" in Westminster appeasing an unreasonable demand? And why is the "child" unable to grow up and mix with its neighbours? KEVIN McGIMPSEY Bristol

Sir: Following the decision by the Chief Constable of the RUC to allow the Orange march to proceed down the Garvaghy Road, Gerry Adams said: "The peace process lies in absolute ruins." He did not say that when the IRA bombs were detonated at Canary Wharf and Manchester. After the Manchester bomb he said: "This is a time for everyone committed to peace to dig deep and apply ourselves with greater determination to restore the peace process." Now he can blame the Unionists for the breakdown of the "peace process" and feel that he is off the book. BERT WARD Middlesbrough, Cleveland

Sir. The Chief Constable of the RUC took the correct decision to allow 1,300 Orangemen to march through Garvaghy Road. I quote from Sir Hugh Annesley's statement: "There was a buildozer, perhaps the potential for more." To stop that buildozer breaking a barricade of barbed wire and concrete blocks it would have been necessary to shoot at the driver. Does anyone except the IRA consider their cause to be furthered by the marterdom of an Orangeman and the subsequent mayhem throughout the province? A É GAME Feltham, Middlesex

Sir: In the Thirties we had the fascist Blackshirts. Laws were made against parading in uniforms. Why do these not apply to the Orangemen's howler hats and sashes?

RIHALL. Chichester, West Sussex

Commons tribute to Mandela

Sir: Your survey of Hansard (9 July) is flawed when it suggests that the first time Nelson Mandela's name was mentioned in the House of Commons was in 1983. One notable earlier occasion was Prime Minister's Question Time on 18 July, 1978. Hansard records:

Miss Joan Lestor: Will my right Hon Friend find time in his busy schedule to go to South Africa House and see whether he can get it opened in order that he may deliver birthday greetings to Nelson Mandela on the occasion of his 60th birthday, after 16 years on Rooben Island, greetings which the South African authorities refused earlier today to accept?

The Prime Minister: I have long been, as I know my Hon Friends are and I hope many Opposition Members are, an admirer of Nelson Mandela. Whether or not South Africa House accepts the greetings. I should like on behalf of Her Majerry's Government to send him formal greenings from this Despatch Box. Jim Callaghan's response came at a time when under the stewardship of David Owen, as Foreign Secretary, the Labour government was moving, albeit hesitatingly, towards a tougher policy against apartheid and, in response to the Soweto uprising and the murder of Steve Biko, was contemplating various forms of economic sanctions.

Historians may now wish to try and assess how much pain and suffering could have been avoided if the apartheid regime had not been protected internationally over the following decade by the constructive engagement policies of Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan.
MICHAEL TERRY

London N12

How the West killed Bosnia

Sir: Your claim that evil in Bosnia triumphed because "the good men of the West did nothing" (Leading article, 11 July) is wrong

From the start of the Bosnian Holocaust, those "good men" did something very effective before they went on doing nothing; they tied the victims' hands by means of an arms embargo. For those who questioned the morality of this deed, Srebrenica provided the

Throughout the four hellish years successive massacres took place in Tuzla, Sarajevo, Prejidor. etc. When "good men" insist on doing nothing to stop this savagery. it becomes obvious that they are no less evil than Karadzic and Mladic.

Europe did not fail Bosnia, as you state. Europe killed Bosnia. Dr SALAH EZZ Oxford

Helping the street children

Sir: Christian Wolmar ("The railway children of Bucharest", 8 July) poses the question: "So what good has the work of Western charities done since 1989?" Whilst a number of Western organisations have made false promises and continue to send truckloads of inappropriate "aid", a number of charities do considerable work in Romania, elsewhere in central and eastern Europe and in the former Soviet Union.

Great Britain has operated childcare programmes in Romania since 1990. These programmes, run in partnership with two indigenous Romanian charities, support almost 2,800 children through individual child sponsorship. In Cluj-Napoca, nearly 700 families receive monthly assistance to help them keep their families together and not abandon them on to the streets or into children's homes,

Christian Children's Fund of International pressure has forced economic reforms upon Romania. Many are desperately needed. However, as in the southern world, it is women and children who have been hardest hit as Romania and other countries make their "transition". It is social welfare programmes which suffer. CCF GB along with a charity from Belgium and a Romanian charity, have recently been awarded a grant from the EU. Our hope is to establish a Family and Child Service Centre in Cluj-Napoca. If successful, we hope that it might be a model which can be adopted by the authorities throughout Romania.

A more appropriate question to pose might be: "So how can Romania implement social legislation and fund social welfare structures: how can the West assist them in doing this?" JON EDWARDS Programme Officer, Romania Christian Children's Fund of Great Britain London EC2

Power to people, not judges

Sir: Richard Bacon appears to confuse judges' power with people's power (letter, 9 July).
Bills of rights confer positive rights which are virtually unrecognised in British law – like the right to personal privacy - thus providing more opportunities for ordinary citizens to sue government ministers and public officials than they have currently.

This does not shift power to judges: it merely requires them to operate according to comprehensible human rights values established by Parliament rather than the more obscure principles which currently underlie the law.

The New Zealand Bill of Rights does not transfer legislative power from parliament to the courts but has pevertheless provided considerably more protection to individuals than anticipated. JONATHAN COOPER Legal Director Liberty

Britain dithers on law of the sea

Sir: In November 1994 the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea came into force. The Government in that year expressed its satisfaction with the agreement which had been negotiated to allow implementation of Part XI of the Convention, dealing with the deep sea bed minerals regime, and expressed its intention to accede. In answer to a written question from Lord Kennet on 20 June 1996. Baroness Chalker, Minister of State at the Foreign Office, confirmed that this is still the long-term aim but that, for scarcely explained reasons concerning the Rockall fisheries zone, HMG would not take a decision on accession in the timeframe necessary to secure voting rights for the UK in the Law of the Sea Tribunal; that is, by 30 June.

I his convention, which formalis and consolidates maritime law and is the most important advance in the law of the sea during the second half of this century, has now been accepted by more than 100 governments including France and Germany, most other European countries, China and Japan. HMG's delay in accession means that no British voice will be heard in those important first meetings of the institutions set up under the convention. Britain has always played a leading part in the development of the law of the sea, not least of this major convention; it is therefore bizarre that maritime interests should be jeopardised in this way. Nothing is to be gained by this delay, least of all for the Rockall fisheries, and much will be lost. We appeal most strongly for the necessary steps towards accession to be completed before Parliament rises in two weeks' time, in order to avoid a further three months' delay. Professor NICHOLAS GASKELL Dr RALPH BEDDARD Professor CHRISTINE CHINKIN MICHAEL RANKEN Institute of Maritime Law University of Southampton Highfield, Hampshire

The wrong MPs Sir: What is all this about paying

MPs more in order to attract the "kind of people we want"? The kind of people who are motivated by money seem to me to be precisely the wrong kind of people. Salaries for MPs were introduced in order to allow ordinary people who had intelligence and a calling but no independent means to take up parliamentary seats. The idea that worthy people with high ideals. who are prepared to forgo large earnings to pursue those ideals, are no more than monkeys who will accept peanuts is a sad comment on a society which sees no value in personal integrity or sacrificial service. Ms V PARKER St Albans, Hertfordshire

Trees in Israel

Sir: It was interesting to read Naomi Cohen's letter (11 July) about Israel's forestation policies. However, there was no reference to the uprooting of over 30,000 trees in the Occupied Territories since the Oslo accords. If the Jewish National Fund enjoys "the accolade of one of the world's oldest environmentalists", perhaps it will oppose the destruction of the Palestinian environment wrought by settlement and road-building? ROB KENT

Post letters to Letters to the Editor, and include a daytime telephone number. Fax: 0171-293 2056; e-mail: letters@independent.co.uk) Letters may be edited for length and clarity.

A COPPER'S TALE

Last year six police officers lost compensation claims for the post-traumatic stress disorder they suffered after the Hillsborough football stadium tragedy. Yet 14 other officers have received £1.2m. Geoff Glave, invalided out of the South Yorkshire force, is one of the six whose case goes before the Court of Appeal today. This is his story.

-was going round trying to sort out who was alive and who was dead. I had been one of those helping to ferry Liverpool supporters by buses from the railway station to the Leppings Lane end of the ground. On the last trip, we realised things were a little bit unusual. because Leppings Lane was a seething mass. At about 2.45pm, we were instructed to go to the opposite, Spion Kop end of the stadium. We were told there was a difficult situation." The first deaths and serious injuries had already occurred in the tunnel leading to the stadium.

Before I realised it, three dead bodies on makeshift stretchers had been deposited at my feet. They were quite obviously dead. The seriousness of it became apparent when we got messages saying that a temporary mortuary had been set up in the gymnasium. Within a few minutes there seemed to be bodies everywhere. Fans, police officers and men from St John Ambulance were bringing stretchers over. The pitch was like a battlefield. There were bodies everywhere. Some people were dead; some went round trying to get them into the recovery position. People were bringing bodies over and then running back to the Leppings Lanc end.

We were sitting among these bodies, eating. By that time, it seemed normal'

"I don't remember any particular feelings then. It was just shock. I think I was numb. We just sort of got on with what we bodies strewn everywhere. Hillsborough had been part of Geoff Glave's landscape since he was a child, when he went there to watch Sheffield Wednesday. The ground was in his police division.

He speaks from an immaculate home on a small development in a former pit village. Glave, 46, and his wife, Elaine, 47, sold the home they had always aspired to in Fulwood, a comfortable middle-class part of Sheffield, after he retired from the South Yorkshire force on a police pension. His income was halved, forcing him and his wife to find a house that was £30,000 cheaper. After years of anguish and depression following that fateful day, 15 April 1989, he was ready to leave Sheffield anyway.

A committed Christian, his life centres round his local evangelical church, his home and garden, and his family. He visits elderly people in the congregation, goes to Spanish classes and this year took GCSE French. The couple have two grown-up children.

He looks every inch the neat, conventional police constable he used to be; upright and decent. But beyond the clear grey eyes lies a fragile and guarded man after a mental battering he could never have imagined possible. He is easily brought to tears, even on happy occasions.

'We were trying to sort out the bodies. We were trying to get doctors to do a preliminary certification. We kept counting, starting off at 20, then 30, then 40. then we stopped counting ... 94 were eventually brought in. Each officer was given a body bag and a body to look after." The two brothers of the lad in Mr Glave's bag collapsed, beside themselves with grief, as he tried to extract some details.

Policemen and women were sat round crying. They just couldn't cope with it. We were doing what we were doing with-out being able to believe it. We were there until past lam.
"I've dealt with deaths appeared to be still alive and we before, and some quite horrific ones, but never on such a scale. We just seemed to be surrounded by deaths.

"There were these meals in hot boxes. The last thing we wanted to do was eat, but eventually people started say perhaps we ought to have something to eat. So we ended up were doing.

A lot of us were sent round bodies, eating. By this time it to the gymnasium at about seemed normal. But it was 3.30. When I got there it was macabre. It was like a living just unbelievable. There were nightmare. There were officers who were really struggling.

"For the next fortnight we were all fairly quiet at work. There was a sort of numbness, disbelief.

"After about six months it was obvious there was something wrong. I had thought everyone else was suffering from depression, but it was me that was suffering.

HAVE A HEART - SEND A PICTURE

Photographic Competition Entry Form

I agree to the terms and conditions detailed below:

☐ 3 photographs for the Heart of Britain Competition and enclose £2

SO GET OUT THERE AND SNAP THE WINNER!

■ □ 10 photographs for the Heart of Britain Competition and enclose £5

The Heart of Britain Book, on sale in October 1996, will feature the 300 best photographs sent in by best to us.

pictures:

people like you. Just take vour pictures and send the Sporty or lazy, upbeat or

There are nine sections in the book. Match one to quaint - it's up to you.

each of your chosen

I would like to enter:

Geoff Glave arrived at Hillsborough on a lovely sunny day, looking forward to the semi-final, and ended it surrounded by death

Photographs: Peter Macdiarmid/Monty Frescoe

"I was persuaded to see the force welfare officer. She advised me to go and see my doctor and go off sick. I started taking anti-depressants.

"I used to drop my wife off at work and drop the children off. Then I used to go and park the car and sit there and cry. I was desperate because Td left my wife and children. drink, but now it was increasing, a lot. "It was a couple of very large whiskies every night when I got home. It got to the point where I was dependent on hav-ing a drink to help me relax and unwind." His tolerance level, as he puts it, fell dramatically.

ENTRY FORM

A HEART-PROCESS

Dixons

For every film processed at Dixons,

Tomorrow's Britain • Animal Britain • Young

Britain • Sporting Britain • Working Britain •Britain on the Move • Caring Britain • Good

Each section winner will camera worth £129.99!

receive an Olympus Mju-1

"My wife and children used to go around keeping their heads

He had flashbacks, and one night a particularly bad night-mare. "I was stood on the terraces at Hillsborough and there was a sort of a greeny-black slime starting to ooze through. It was coming through the gaps in the concrete steps. I was try was trying to scream out 'help, help', or something. It was one of those situations where I was trying to scream but couldn't. I woke up and my wife was saying, 'What's the matter, what's the matter?' I was on all fours pushing at the pillow.

"I went back to work after a month. I thought I was better. I wasn't.'

In December 1992 he went off sick with what he thought was a bad dose of flu. He never returned to work.

He was certified by a Leeds University psychiatrist as suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, now recognised as a distinct psychological condition. Glave was the only one in his division who was going for counselling, although he says there were others who were suffering. "It's very much a macho thing, that you're a bobby. You can stand this sort of thing.

of comments made about me when I went back to work. from people who had been there [at Hillsborough] and people who hadn't. Any newspaper articles were left prominently for me to find, articles about mental illness or stress. By about June 1993, the Glave had always liked a ing to push myself away from it. welfare officer said I was burnt I couldn't get away from it. I out. I retired after 23 years.

was trying to scream out 'help, "I had dreamt I was on a cricket pitch. All around me were people that I'd known. Senior officers from South Yorkshire and various other people were fielding. I was batting. As I was batting, the bowling was getting harder and harder. Someone kept coming up to me and taking the bat from me and giving me a smaller bat. Eventually, they took the bat off me and gave me something that looked like a thin polythene bag. I looked at it and looked around and smiled, dropped it and said you can stuff sense of relief that I'd not got to face any more of it." When he and the five others it and walked off the pitch. By the time I retired it was a great

"People thought I'd grown brought their claims before the two heads. There were all sorts High Court in Sheffield last brought their claims before the year. Mr Justice Waller threw them out. The three defendants - the South Yorkshire force, Sheffield Wednesday Football Club and the engineers Eastwood and Partners had admitted liability for neg-ligence. But the judge ruled that the six were not "rescuers

> "The relatives were screaming at me that I had murdered their son'

and that their involvement had not been "within the area of proximity", making it unrea-sonable for them to recover damages when "bystanders" would not

In last month's settlement at the door of the court, the three defendants agreed to pay out £1.2m in damages to 14 other officers who had tried who had played similar roles to save crushed and dying fans in the Leppings Lane pens.

Is there a real difference ally being blamed, when all I between the two groups? "People say that we are chasing money, but we're actually trying to get some acknowledgement that we're not supermen or superwomen. We can cope with horrific situations, but not with something on the scale of Hillsborough

"It was a lovely sunny day. We were enjoying being alive, working, looking forward to a semi-final, a tremendous atmosphere at Hillsborough. And then, suddenly, 94, and eventually 96, people were dead."

Glave had attended murder scenes in the past, and suicides. You have a few sleepness nights and then you get over it." The fact that so much blame was laid at the door of police officers has left an indelible scar. He won't be attending the Court of Appeal in London today after his experience at the hearing in Sheffield.

There were relatives down there. When I came out they were screaming at me that I murdered their son. I was ill for about a week after that. I just can't cope with that. The thing I can't cope with is actuwas doing was doing my job and trying to sort out the mess afterwards.

"It was obvious that a lot of people had turned up without tickets. A lot of people had drunk a hell of a lot before - who were determined to get into the ground and they didn't care who ot in the way. I'm not blaming Liverpool fans or Forest fans. But South Yorkshire police were not the only ones to blame.

"Yes, it does make me feel angry. The numbers of officers claiming has been whittled down [originally 150, now 37]. There's been a lot of emotional blackmail. He does not believe he has the mental or emotional strength to hold down a job. "I could not cope with the rigours of it. I have a very short fuse. I have to avoid situations of conflict, and things like crowds, which threaten to wind me up or make me feel claustrophobic.

"I still think about it. There are constant reminders, like every time a football match is mentioned.

As we speak, he gets a phone call from his daughter to say she has just graduated in social science. Elaine, formerly a school secretary, is now studying social science as well. "I think they're trying to figure me out."

Interview by Patricia Wynn Davies

Sign here for years of aggravation fully expect to be arrested funny about this payment ..."

And the reason she is saying .day now.

The scenario will be like this. I am buying some vital summertime household item in a reputable store, such as a hammock or a man-size cactus plant, and after a bit of haggling I agree to pay the full price. I hand over my credit card. The assistant makes me sign all the forms, and then goes behind the scenes, saying: "Just a moment, please."

Now, if this were happening in a restaurant. I'd know what was going on. The waiter would be retiring to a safe corner to make a note of my credit card number, my signature and my details so that he could later make lots of purchases in my name. Maybe he even has a machine in the kitchen that reproduces credit cards on the spot. I don't know. Fair enough, though-

But the scenario in the big department store where I buy my cactus and hammocks is different. I know that behind the scenes the assistant is talking to a Mr Robinson and saying. "I think there's something

And the reason she is saying this is that my signature on the form doesn't look much like the signature on the credit card.

And the reason she is say-ing this is that I have just received a new credit card. And when I came to obey the instructions ("Cut your old credit card in 10,000 tiny pieces and burn each one in a scparate bonfire, then sign your new card AND NEVER EVER LOSE SIGHT OF IT except of course in a restaurant when letting a waiter have it to take to his little machine in the kitchen to make thousands more like it ") I tried to sign the new card, and found that there wasn't enough room on the little strip for my normal signature so I made a mess of it, and now the signature on my credit card looks as if it belongs to Mike

Am I the only one who thinks that the signature space on modern credit cards does not correspond to the size of modern signatures? Over the years I have worked out a fairly consistent signature which, if my mind is elsewhere, I can always reproduce accurately. (If I am trying to concentrate, I make a mess of it. Signing your name is one of those things that have to be done without thinking about them, like reversing a car into a small space, carrying a very full glass of water, or dancing the waltz.) But when I try to get this familiar signature on to a credit card. my pen slides off the strip at top and bottom and while I am trying to force it back on again, my signature goes all agley, like a car rolling from side to side of the road after hitting

Miles Kington

So I end up called Mike Kim on my credit card.

But I sign my credit card slip from Miles Kington. And the lady in the department store hurries away to consult Mr Robinson before sending for Which brings us fleetingly to Princess Diana. Princess Diana has recently won £15m in the Royal National Lottery, but lost her right to be called Her Royal Highness. A few people felt sorry for her and a lot of people felt that she was a lot more overpaid than any MP will ever be, but my immediate reaction was to think: Clever girl, she now has more of a chance of getting her name on to her credit card than she had before. Previously, she had to sign herself as "HRH Princess of Wales" or some such, but now she can get away with something a lot shorter. Whatever she's called now. (You can tell that I am not sure how these titles work. I myself was once divorced, and my ex-wife decided to keep the title she had gained through marriage, but as the title was only Mrs Kington, it never made the front page of the News of the World.)

The trouble with credit cards is that you don't get a second chance to do your signature. Whatever you write in that little strip is there for years and years. My only chance now is to painstakingly change my everyday signature to make it look more like the one signed by "Mike Kim" on my credit card, or even change my name by deed poll to Mike Kim. Or perhaps I could get it done by machine. These days, whenever you are trying to write a cheque out in a department store, the assistant always tries to stop you by saying, "No, we print the cheque for you," or more commonly. when you ask who it should be made payable to, "It's all right, we've got a stamp." Then the hand the cheque to you, together with a pen, for signature. At which point, I will reject the pen and say, "It's all right. I've got a stamp" and produce a printing stamp that has an exact reproduction of Mike Kim's signature on it. It's a bit dodgy. But it's better than being arrested for credit card fraud.

ે ୈ⊅)●

A being that works in mysterious ways

Who is to say what is a proper religion? That all-seeing judge of transcendental things, the Charity Commission physics - a journey to the heart The pagans are deep in spiritual combat with the Charity Commission. For 10 years, the Pagan Hospice and Funeral Trust tried the ragan mospice and runeral trust tried to get registered as a religious charity but the Commission said no – they were not a proper religion. Finally, last year, the Trust managed to get themselves registered under a different clause of charity law – not as a a conserent clause of charity law – not as a religion, but as a group doing good to the dying and the bereaved. However, less than a year later, the Commission is trying to take away their charitable status again, on the grounds that the Tust's work is essentially entitied and religious rather than essentially spiritual and religious rather than of general public use. This is a peculiarly circular argument – they are too religious to be an ordinary charity, but not religious enough to count as a religion.

The Trust is a tiny charity. It trains counsellors to minister to the pagan dying and conducts funerals. Paganism is recognised as a proper religion by the Home Office, which allows registered pagan chaptains into pris-ons. The Trust's attempt to buy a pagan burake a deep breath of oxygen, for you are about to enter the rarified atmosphere of arcane metathe Commission to think again. There is no suggestion of any wrong-doing. We may have made a mistake in granting them charitable status, the Commission says.

Faut de mieux, the Commission has ratif de mieux, the Commission has become the nation's official theologian, decreeing what is and what is not a bona fide religion. This intellectually impossible task leads them into the counting of angels on pins, the weighing up of trascendental things, the judging of the ineffable, Paganism they recovered. ism, they pronounce, is not a religion.

The law says that the promulgation of The law says that the promulgation of religion is a public good per se and therefore a charitable cause (despite the history of mankind suggesting quite the contrary). Will any religion do? "Well, it must have a Deity or Supreme Being, modelled to some extent on the Judaeo-Christian tradition." What about the Buddhists, who have no God, or the Hindus, who have encyclonaedias full of them? "Oh of course we clopaedias full of them? "Oh, of course we accept the world's five major religions. They are substantial." So size matters? "Yes, and antiquity." What about the Mormons? They are not ancient and their beliefs are distinctly odd. "There are a great many of them." What about the Exclusive

Bretheren, who do definite harm to those born into their closed ranks? "We do allow cults and sects within the main religions."

But why not the pagans, who claim, perhaps not entirely convincingly, some 100,000 adherents? "They do not believe in a single Supreme Being, but they worship aspects of nature. Paganism is a loose association, not like a church. They are too self-defining mithaut initiation. self-defining, without initiation to mark membership, without much ceremony and ritual." So more mumbo-jumbo with more smells, spells and bells might do the trick?

Clare Prout, a witch and co-ordinator of the Pagan Hospice and Funeral Trust, fulminates with indignation. They have initiation rituals - with blindfolds, circles and a turning to the North, South, East and West. Their covens have ceremonies, cast-ples." Quite apart from the eerie racist overing circles, casting spells, sending out powers to do good. They are not devilish, but believe whatever they send out for good or evil rebounds upon the sender fourfold. They reject the Christian tradition of dividing things into good and evil, a dualism that fails to describe things as they are - an inextricable mixture of both.

Pagans have many gods. There are eight main rituals a year - the two solstices of Yule and Summer, Lammas, Beltaine (Mayday), Sawainc (Halloween, the old Celtic new year), Imbolc (ewe's milk) and the two equinoxes. Their ceremonies, she says, create energy but they are not as emotionally consuming as the speaking in tongues of the Pentecostalists.

You may think all this is fairly loopy. It however, no loopier than other religions. Nor is it odder than others on the commission's register. Consider The Odinic Rite, which got its charitable status as a religion in 1988, for "The continuity and promotion of the organic spiritual beliefs and religion of the indigenous people of North-ern Europe as embodied in the Eddas and as they have found expression in the wisdom and historic experience of these peo-tones, the pagans mutter that the Odinists only got registered as a bona fide religion by pretending that Odin worship is monotheistic, when it has myriads of gods.

Case law on acceptable religions makes case law on acceptable religious makes enjoyably silly reading. For a long while, the South Place Ethical Society – atheists. humanists and agnostics – were absurdly registered as a religion, although their aim has always been to demolish belief in a God or a hereafter. They were thrown off the religious register in 1980, but crept back as a charity under the more likely clause that a charity under the more likely clause that they do public good by debunking superstition. Chinese ancestor-worship and scientologists, however, failed in the courts. What is the answer to all this? Religion is ineffable, mysterious, an act of faith, a state of grace, a light inaccessibly hidden from our eyes - not, in other words, the sort of thing courts or charity commissioners should be expected to codify and police. There is only one sane answer – and that is to deregister them all. Our secular society, where only 35 per cent of people believe in a Supreme Being, should not be spending public funds, in tax forgone, to finance any of these curious balies. any of these curious beliefs.

We fight on, for the 140 million listeners

John Tusa on why the World Service must be independent

rive weeks on from director-general John Birt's radical reor-ganisation proposals of 7 June, resistance to them as they affect the BBC World Service has continued to grow. This has taken BBC management by surprise, but has not induced them to offer any substantive changes. The critics must fight on. Why?

First, the reported so-called Birt "concessions" of last Friday do not represent a concession of any signifi-cance. Even if World Service News and Current Affairs remain at Bush House, they will still be transferred to the editorial control of BBC News and Current Affairs. Another layer of editorial and managerial control will have been introduced.

Second, the transfer of all other English language programme-making to the new BBC domestic "super" directorates destroys the essential integration of World Service programmemaking, where the English service and the 42 other languages live off one another in a symbiotic process.

Third, in the past decade and a half, the World Service has made more and more of its programmes itself. As Radio 4 programmes focused more closely on the needs of their audiences, the World Service found them less suitable for their international listeners. When Bush House made programmes designed for the global audience, the World Service reached levels of listenership and respect never achieved before.

Fourth, the World Service had in the recent past to "commission" some of its financial programmes from Radio 4. They were never satisfactory.

Fifth, under the accounting systems that will prevail in the new structures, the cash-strapped World Service will have to pay for BBC domestic overheads in a way that it has never had to before. It is all designed to help the domestic services.

Five weeks on, the director-general proclaims the perfection of his plans; the possibility of error has never entered his mind. The chairman, Sir Christopher Bland—and how long did he have to scrutinise the proposals before rubber-stamping them? - rejects all criticism as "insulting".

Surely the time has come for some answers. They are owed to the 2,000 World Service staff, the 140 million listeners, and the countless British listeners who know what the service is worth

The clock should be stopped at 7 June. Nothing will be lost by such a delay, except conceivably some loss of face by the director-general. Nothing should be done until the National Audit Office has scrutinised the Birt proposals to see if they will represent value for taxpayer's money, and will allow the World Service to continue to be editorially and managerially

The writer was managing director of the BBC World Service from 1986 to 1992

Ulster looks into the abyss

David McKittrick laments the week that destroyed everything shed" and "momen-tous" have been used so often in relation to Northern Ireland in recent years that their meaning is in danger of becoming devalued. But there is little doubt that the events of last week merit both of those terms and more. Furthermore, the watershed is one of a most disastrous kind.

The sight of riots, petrol bombs and destruction is bad enough, but the long-term consequences of what has happened in the past week are even worse. The rule of law has been fundamentally, perhaps fatally, undermined and it may be that the Boubles, which many had hoped had run their course, are being regenerated before

The Government gives every appearance of either not understanding what is happening or of being in denial. The impression given by Sir Patrick Mayhew, in a series of slighlty the problem lay among three elements: Unionists, nationalists, and the local police force. There was no evident recognition that in the course of the week a large amount of authority had been transferred from the Government to the men on the streets. Sir Patrick told one incredulous interviewer to cheer up.

What began at Drumcree on Sunday last as a problem over a march developed, as thousands of Orangemen took to the streets in an effort to bring the province to a standstill, into a fundamental issue of the rule of law.

The eventual decision to reverse the original ruling and allow the Orange-men to march along the Catholic Garvaghy Road was defended by Sir Hugh Annesley, the chief constable, and by Sir Patrick on purely pragmatic grounds. If the RUC had not forced the march through, Sir Hugh argued. the security forces could have been overwhelmed and many deaths might have followed. There was no other option, Sir Patrick explained breezilv. This frank recognition of realpolitik ignored what many nationalists saw as the moral dimension. The authorities had thought it right to ban the march; their minds had been changed not by force of argument, but by a wave of civil disobedience that stretched from peaceful demonstrations through hijackings and intimidation to serious saults and a murder.

Moderate nationalist Ireland, political and spiritual, watched in horror as the two men, and later John Major, spelled out that the Government had in effect no choice but to bow to the disorder threatened by the big Orange battalions. This section of opinion has spent a quarter of a century arguing with republican extremists that Britain is neutral in the dispute.

 The Government has, however, just conceded what the hawks in the IRA argue: that Britain responds primarily to violence, and that a peace process is less likely to bring results that a war process.

David Trimble, leader of the Ulster Unionist Party for less than a year, has just moved away from the strict parliamentarianism of his predecessor, James Molyneaux, and regressed to an earlier, more primitive form of Unionism, the sort identified with Carson sis of 1912 and after. In other words, he is not just head of a small group of MPs but can also command a highly effective Orange street force.

Mr Trimble has not, during his career, made any proposal on the future government of Northern Ireland which was remotely likely to be acceptable to northern nationalists. He is hardly likely to do so now.

Unionism has always contained voices who have argued that the best means of strengthening and safe-guarding the union with Britain was to alists. This faction has, however, always been in a minority, and is now certain to remain so. The psychological mindset of the leaders of Unionism and Orangeism is that if they eschew negotiation, stand firm and face down their opponents they are likely to get their way. They will now be confirmed in this belief. With

Drumcree under his belt, Mr Trimble

may enter a more parliamentary phase quote Theodore Roosevelt, that while he may speak softly, he carries a big stick. One need only ask oneself: who has more power in the province now, David Trimble or Sir Patrick Mayhew?

After the loyalist general strike of 1974, it took British governments 11 years before they dared to take an action strongly opposed by Unionists and sign the 1985 Anglo-Irish Agree-

placed on British policymakers, and it another Conservative government, doing anything that would go strongly against the Orange grain. Re-imposing the full authority that the Government lost last week would require taking on the Orange Order again at

The week had another terrible effect in that it set back for years the another Drumcree and winning.

hawks argue: that Britain responds to violence reach an accommodation with nation- ment. Now a new armlock has been but from now on, all will be aware, to prospects of some agreed new settle-working on the theory that while the union with Britain is here to stay for the foreseeable future, the consolation on offer to Irish nationalists is the construction, slowly but surely, of a fairer Northern Ireland in which Unionism and nationalism can both be respected. That theory has been dealt a shattering and possibly lethal blow. The Government has conceded what the IRA

Priests, bishops and nationalist MPs are all now saying the same thing: that the RUC, probably with government approval, showed itself one-sided both in its strategy and in the actions of individual officers.

ment. Dublin and moderate nationalists have spent a decade and more

In 1969, the television pictures of officers clubbing Catholic civil rights campaigners led to the first serious is difficult to imagine Tony Blair, or trouble. In 1996, nationalist leaders watched with something close to disbelief as policemen did not move in on Orangemen blocking roads but waded in with unmistakable energy and even enthusiasm to shift Catholics sitting down on the Garvaghy Road.

The RUC, the most important institution of the state, had won the quiet admiration of many nationalists over the years for its increased professionalism and, often, its attention to political sensitivities. It is no exaggeration to say that almost all of this has been lost in the course of a single week, leaving many nationalists speculating darkly that there may have been some form of mutiny threatened within the force by police who would not con-

Bogside early

terday. The idea that Britain is neutral has been dealt a devastating blow

template taking on the Orange order. Most Orangemen clearly believe that they won a great victory last week. Certainly their march got through. Nationalists were humili-ated, and Unionism and Orangeism demonstrated real muscle.

But in the process the underlying instability of the state was exposed, the very fabric of society was ripped and damaged, and the most fundamental questions were posed about the reformability of Northern Ireland.

It seems hardly credible that a province which last year had the hope of a bright new future could so swiftly be transformed into a political wasteland, its economic prospects dashed. its image defaced, its communal relations in ruins. Even in Ireland the prospects have rarely seemed bleaker.

Good-bye battery

Welcome to the future: Seiko Kinetic*, the first quartz watch that turns your movement into power. Every move you make is converted into electrical impulses by a tiny built-in powerhouse. Ecological, reliable and efficient: wear it one day to gain energy for at least two weeks. Wear it daily - it will run continually. Made of titanium: light, yet strong and kind to your skin. 20 bar water resistant. One-way rotating bezel and screw lock crown. Seiko Kinetic - it's built to last. Someday all watches will be made this way.

Seiko Kinetic at: http://www.seiko-corp.co.jp

Power to the people of London town

Following the loss of the GLC, a movement has begun to campaign for change. But will its ideas lead to action?

The abolition of the Greater London Council by Margaret Thatcher has had at least this monthly debates, which began in Janadvantage: it has forced Londoners to think creatively for themselves about their city, rather than to leave it to local politicians. Into the vacuum have come dozens of bodies to consider virtually every aspect of the capital and campaign for change.

THINA

On the list in front of me are more than 120 separate organisations: Action for London, London First, London Cycling Campaign, London Rivers Association, London Forum, London Pride, and so on. Drawn into these groups are people who would never think of standing in a local election. Some are concerned gitizens in a general sense. Some are Simmitted to a particular cause. For some. London has become a sort of hobby. But they are all involved in a highly creative thinking has taken place, unburdened, it must be said, by the responsibility of representing an actual group of people living in a par-Licular area.

Then along came the Architecture Foundation, with the notion of holding public meetings on London uary and finished last week.

This sudden widening of public participation has changed the nature of the enterprise. A collection of disparate bodies of well-meaning people is beginning to turn into a movement, and becoming something more than a series of single-issue pressure groups. The reason for this coming together is that improving London is such an attractive enterprise. It is not just the place where the campaigners live: more than that, London is a world city comparable with Paris, New York and Tokyo. A recent study showed that London and New York level peg as the world's leading financial centres; Lon-don matches New York and Paris in tourism; it is fully up with the others in creative and cultural industries; and never-ending dialogue in which some it retains substantial power and influence well beyond national boundaries. Equally, these four cities have disgraceful shortcomings - transport in London and New York, areas of great social deprivation in all but

The challenge, therefore, is nothing less than to make London the best

ANDREAS WHITTAM SMITH

ment could take many forms. Herbert Girardet, for instance, who studies the metabolism of cities, believes that London could become a pioneer in the 21st century as it was in the 19th. In the last century. London set the pattern for cities everywhere in its early use of lossil fuels, in its public transport network and its sewage disposal arrangements. It could do so again, by achieving what Girardet calls a circular metabolism. No longer wantonly dumping sewage, themes. It found to its astonishment place in the world. Such an achieve-exhaust gases, household and factory recycle plant nutrients as well as physical goods, and it would fully embrace clean energy technology such as solar systems. The capital city would become self-sustaining Wonderful! But there is a prior question. How is the connection to be made between ideas and action? Once you have excited thousands of people with your notions, you have to get real and find ways of influencing the decision-takers in the direction of new ideas for a better city.

John Gummer delivered some soundbites and promptly left

At the last of the series of debates on Friday - extracts from which can be seen on Carlton TV this evening at 10.40pm - it was agreed that in the absence of an elected authority, there are two subsidiary sets of decisiontakers that can be worked on, First, there are the financial institutions which own so much office, retail and factory property in London; and, second, there are the London boroughs. which retain considerable powers. As for central government, the difficulties were exemplified by the behaviour of the Environment Secretary, John Gummer, who came into the debate and then promptly left. This leaves most people engaged in to deliver some soundbites to camera

waste wherever it could, London would the London crusade hoping for a change of government. That is Plan A. Mr Blair enters 10 Downing Street and delivers an elected strategic body for London and a separately elected mayor - as he said he would at the public debate held in April. The trouble with this approach is that it is passive and trusting.

So Plan B has emerged. Under this scheme, a sort of unofficial Royal Commission is established to do the hard work of turning ideas about the future of London into coherent policy proposals. Care is taken to make the exercise as consultative as possible by reaching out to ordinary Londoners. It is done quickly in order to fit into Plan A. Perhaps the City of London is invited to provide the necessary standing as well as the secretariat. In this way, ideas begin to be transmuted into action by gaining authority. The movement for a better London makes progress.

Perhaps even a Conservative govemment with a renewed mandate would find it difficult to reject a wellargued case for reform. The abolition of the GLC would finally have produced a great benefit, albeit too long in coming - a completely fresh start in the government of London.

John Chancellor

American television has never the morning news and chat been notable for its intellishow Today, Chancellor engence, but the news "anchorman" John Chancellor was a ing reputation as a cultural remarkable exception. In an age of weather girls unable to distinguish cumulus from cirrus, and reporters remarkable el without sacrificing allchiefly for their dentistry. Chancellor exemplified an earlier generation of television presenters who were, first, reporters of news, only secondarily (and embarrassingly to them) celebrities.

Unlike many current broadcasters, Chancellor joined television from a position in print He wrote his own words and asked his own questions and, in addition to his traditional virtues as a reporter, his work was characterised by a thoughtfulness and sceptical intelli-gence which, in the reductionist environment of American television, seemed strongly intellectual. Curiously for one whose television reputation was essen-tially highbrow. Chancellor never graduated from college. He grew up in Chicago, raised by an Irish mother who, as he liked to recall, landed as a girl on Ellis Island. Leaving high school, he briefly attended the Chicago's Navy Pier, then went to work as a reporter for the Chicago Sun-Times. Chicago journalism was still in its Front Page heyday: as a training ground for aggressive, compet-itive journalists it was nonpareil; and for all his eventual urbanity Chancellor never lost the appetite for a good story.

In 1959 print was more prestigious than electronic media, so Chancellor was taking a risk by joining the National Broadcasting Company (NBC) as a Chicago-based reporter in that vear. He concentrated first on radio, serving with the local af-filiate WMAQ, but then gradually began work in television as the fledgling national news operation of NBC took hold. As a reporter, he was imaginative. pioneering "remotes" such as a live radio broadcast from the Yerkes Observatory in Wisconsin, and brave, covering a massive oil and gas fire close up at the Hammond Indiana oil refineries and once sneaking microphone in hand into a cinema to broadcast the capture of a holed-up gunman, only to discover that the police had not yet

NBC ladder and received grander postings - Moscow, London, and Brussels were among his beats in the years that followed. At the Republican National Convention in 1964, he was arrested as an on-floor reporter by security men for straying outside designated space; he signed off his on-air report with the famous line. This is John Chancellor, somewhere in custody. As the host for two years of

Chancellor: appetite for a story

hanced the programme's growinstitution, and showed that a mix of news and entertainment could be presented at a high levimportant ratings. Tellingly, he was the one presenter of Today able to defy the network's stipulation that he do commercials as well as the programme itself. However "light" Today could be. Chancellor insisted on preserving a distinction between the role of journalist

This integrity and his growing stature as a correspondent drew Chancellor to the attention of President Johnson, then looking for someone to head the Voice of America (America's Cold War equivalent of the BBC's World Service). With the country's position in the world increasingly undermined by the escalation of its involvement in Vietnam, the post was unattractive, not to mention badly paid. But, as with so many other appointees of LBJ, Chancellor found himself unable to resist the importuning mix of flattery and cajolery from his President. In the event, he served only two years, finding the job as difficult as expected, and finding too that he preferred the excitement of news reporting to the labours of administration.

Returning to NBC in 1967 as a national correspondent, Chancellor ascended to the main anchorman's chair for the Nighth News in 1970, at first paired with David Brinkley (surviving member of the preceding Huntley-Brinkley team), then on his own. Initially competing against the fabled Walter Cronkite on CBS, Chancellor seemed doomed to enjoy only second place in the critical supper-time ratings. But gradually, aided by Cronkite's retirement and a growing apti-tude for the job, Chancellor and NBC drew even with their rivals and at times outstripped them.

As anchor, Chancellor's imaginativeness and humour were necessarily restrained, which he sometimes found frustrating. He lasted in the position a dozen years, however, in part because of NBC's failure to find an equally accomplished replacement. Finally stepping down in 1982, he remained a fixture on the Nightly News as com-Much of this ingenuity, and mentator into the next decade, a humorous but attractively un- and was greatly popular for his pretentious manner remained wry, pointed reflections about even as Chancellor climbed the events of the day. After retiring completely from NBC, he published two books on American broadcasting and America's future, as well as narrating a critically esteemed PBS series on baseball.

> Although never an icon of the mass media like his rival Walter Cronkite (for several generations of Americans the face of the evening news) nor capable of the showbiz appeal of his tandem predecessors Huntley and Brinkley. Chancellor none the less represented a superior intelligence in American broadcasting which, with his death, has no surviving practitioner.

Andrew Rosenheim John William Chancellor, journalist and broadcaster: born Chicago, Illinois 14 July 1927; staff, NBC News 1950-65, 1967-93; Director, Voice of America 1966-67; married Constance Herbert (marriage dissolved; one daughter), 1958 Barbara Upshaw (one son, one daughter); died Princeton, New Jersey 12 July 1996.

A cheerful, flat-nosed extrovert: world welterweight champion Rodriguez allows his challenger Emile Griffith to knock off his 'crown', May 1963

Luis Rodriguez

Luis Rodriguez was one of a celebrated quintet of estab-lished Cuban professional boxers who emigrated in the wake of Fidel Castro's rise to power and who went on to become world champions. The others were Uliminio "Sugar" Ramos, Benny Parat, Jose Legra and Jose Napoles

Ramos and Napoles eventually settled in Mexico. Legra in Spain, and both the ill-fated Parat, who died following a world title contest in 1962, and Rodriguez made their homes in the United States.

Born in Camaguey, in the centre of the island, Rodriguez was the Cuban welterweight champion by the time he was 21, but when the Batista Government fell to Castro in January 1959, professional sport rapidly fell out of favour. Within four months the machinery of the socialist economy was in place, and although there continued to be professional boxing promotions for some time, the ideological strain of Castro's revolution was effectively sealed by his landmark statement: "I am a Marxist-Leninist and shall be until I die".

A cheerful, flat-nosed extrovert, Rodriguez settled quickly in America, after arriving in Miami in mid-1959. He soon earned a world rating, and went on to win the world welter-weight title in the Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles in March 1963 with a 15-round points decision over the defending champion, the Virgin Islander Emile

Although he was trained by Angelo Dundee, whose name was made by his long associa-tion with Muhammad Ali, Rodriguez did not last long as champion himself. Griffith had been smart enough to insist on a return clause in the contract and only three months later at the rematch in Madison Square Garden, New York, a split decision by the judges went in favour of Griffith. Rodriguez was furious. "I thought I won easily," he complained. In a third and "deciding" world title fight in Las Vegas in June 1964, Griffith won but again it was desperately close, one judge scoring for Rodriguez and two for the champion. In 1964 Rodriguez twice beat Rubin Carter, who was eventually jailed for a murder he did not commit and became the subject of Bob Dylan's song Hurricane".

At the end of 1966 Rodriguez moved up to middleweight and twice beat the alarmingly tough Philadelphian Bennie Briscoe, but when he eventually challenged the richly talented reigning champion Nino Benvenuti for the world 11st 6lb champiouship in Rome in November 1969, his early points lead was wiped out when he was knocked out by a single left hook in the 11th round

Luis Rodriguez carried on boxing until he became just a stepping stone for rising hope-fuls. In May 1971 he boxed in London and lost a 10-round decision to the British champion Bunny Sterling and finally retired after losing on points to Donato Paduano of Canada in Montreal in April 1972. He had 121 professional fights over 16 years, won 107 and lost 13, with one No Contest. In retirement he continued to live in post-war years. At its peak in the 1950s and 1960s his company, Quinton Hazeli Ltd, sold to 160 countries world-wide and was the largest independent supplier of auto-mobile parts in Europe. Previously, motor spares in Britain were available only from automotive manufacturers; they came in separate greasy bits of paper, often with the vital part missing. Hazell's product, a neat box containing all that was needed for a particular job, bore the Welsh dragon as a trademark. In the Far East they were known as "Dragon" products, and since the dragon was a respected symbol they enjoyed an ever-increasing share of the market. Hazell also developed a chain of wholesalers, and whereas previously such outfits had been anonymous - windows painted over with green paint without and oily counters within - he insisted on window displays, well-stocked stores and tidy assistants. These changes, and many others, became accepted trade practice, and it was not long before motor journals dubbed Hazell "the father of the automobile after market".

Luis Manuel Rodriguez, boxer-born Camaguey, Cuba 17 June 1937; married; died Miami,

Credited as the man who broke

Quinton Hazell was born in Burnage, near Manchester, in 1920, and attended Manchester Grammar School where he proved his sporting prowess as an excellent swimmer and rugby player. On leaving, instead of going to university, he chose to embark on an apprenticeship in a chain of garages owned by a family friend in Colwyn Bay. He was 18 when the Second World War broke out and was sent to France with the British Expeditionary Force in 1939. Evacuated from Dunkirk, he finished his service as Battery Quarter Master Sergeant Royal Artillery.

During the war Hazell saw how the Americans presented their motor spares - wellcoded and easy to use - and after demobilisation visited the United States to observe how their motor trade was organised. He returned in 1946 and, with the help of a £5,000 legacy, a Morwenna Parry-Jones (one staff of four friends and his wife Morwenna, set up his own comshire 24 June 1996.

pany to manufacture and sell motor parts. Growth was rapid and consistent. By the mid-1950s the company was employing nearly 800 staff.

Over the next 15 years the business continued to expand and probe new markets. In 1972 Quinton Hazeli Ltd won the Queen's Award for Industhe Queen's Award for indus-try, for export achievement. The following year the compa-ny was taken over by Burmah Oil. Hazell found that life in a big corporation did not suit him and started to look around for new challenges. He took a stake in the Supra Group, a small company making sound insulation, under-seal and paint for the motor trade. A motor component side was added and, never one to do anything half-heartedly. Hazell began competing against his own Burmah-owned subsidiary, Quinton Hazell Ltd.

Outside his own business area, Hazell was well known in the West Midlands for his trenchant views on British industry and the decline of its manu-facturing base. He also played an active part in public life, serving for many years as Chairman of the West Midlands Planning Council and being appointed Deputy Lieutenant of Warwickshire in 1982. He was appointed CBE for political services in 1978 and was knight-ed in 1995.

Peter Dighton

Quinton Hazell, businessman: born Manchester 14 December 1920; MBE 1961, CBE 1978; chairman, Quinton Hazell 1946-73; director, Foreign and Colonial Investment Trust 1978-90; Kt 1995; married 1942

Gottfried von Einem

Against the background of cul-tural uncertainty that inevitably position for the jazz-influenced tural uncertainty that inevitably followed the total destruction of Austria at the end of the Second World War, the organisers of the Salzburg Festival took the with the ballet Prinzessin Darmstadt school. unusually bold step of featuring an entirely new opera by a virtually unknown composer for their 1947 Festival. The opera in question was Dantons Tod ("Danton's Death") by the 29year-old Austrian Gottfried von Einem, and its overwhelming success served to launch von Einem almost immediately into the forefront of post-war musical activity in Central

The son of the Austrian military attaché in Switzerland, von Einem was educated in Germany and England, and at the age of 20 was appointed répétiteur at the Berlin Staatsoper. From 1941 to 1943 he studied privately with Boris Blacher, a composer whose music had recently been proscribed by the Nazis. Von Einem was also to experience conflict with the Nazi regime, suffering temporary arrest and interrogation by the Gestapo (an episode that would later be recalled rather chillingly in his second opera Der Prozess, based on Franz Kafka's The Trial)

painter, 1606; John Barnett (Beer), composer, 1802; Sir Henry Cole, promoter of the Great Exhibition of 1851

Europe.

Concerto for Orchestra. Yet de-Turandot, first performed in Dresden in 1944.

The failed assassination attempt upon Hitler during the same year provided the initial inspiration for Dantons Tod. which von Einem adapted, together with Blacher, from Büchner's drama about the French Revolution. When it was first performed, the historical relevance of such material was not iost upon post-war audiences beginning to come to terms with the horrors perpetrated by the Nazis. But von Einem's score also impressed for its virtuosic handling of the chorus in the Tribunal Scene of Act II, and for its expressionist but tonallybased idiom.

Expressionism also influenced the composition of Der Prozess, similarly premiered in Salzburg in 1954. This time, however, critical opinion was more mixed, and it was questionable whether von Einem had successfully encapsulated the ambiguities of Kafka's text within his bitingly rhythmic Stravinskian idiom. In any case, by the mid-1950s von Einem's brand of accessible modernism was aiready deemed old-

While von Einem was no longer occupying the position of international eminence that followed Dantons Tod, his music would still be championed by prominent interpreters. Ference Friesay and Herbert von Karaian regularly performed his orchestral works, while substantial chamber pieces were later commissioned by the Vienna String Trio and the Alban Berg Quartet. Von Einem's new operas also enjoyed glittering premieres in the major Austrian and German theatres. Hamburg hosted the first performance of his third opera Der Zerissene ("The Disunited") in 1964, while 12 years later Kabale und Liebe ("Ćabal and Love", after Schiller) was given in Vienna under Christoph von Dohnanyi. Between these two works came Der Besuch der alten Dame ("The Visit of the Old Lady") a setting of the play by Friedrich Dürrenmatt about the corruption engendered by the lust for money. The opera made such a positive impression at its Viennese premiere that it reappraisal of his achievement, was soon staged elsewhere, securing performances at Glyndebourne during 1973 and 1974.

Von Einem wrote two more operas, neither of which have yet been heard in this country. The premiere in 1980 of the first of these works. Jesu Hochzeit ("Jesus's Wedding"), occasioned a national scandal on account of its text, by von Einem's second wife Lotte Ingrisch. which offended the Catholic Church for portraying an erotic encounter between Jesus, and for representing Life and Love, and a female Death. Like much of von Einem's later work, the music is more austere, in a manner that sometimes recalls the late style of Mahler.

In Austria, von Einem enjoyed a distinguished career as an administrator, serving on the boards of the Salzburg Festival, Wiener Konzerthausgesellschaft and the Vienna Festival. He was also a Professor of Composition at the Vienna Hochschule für Musik. Although he was honoured in his own country as a composer of outstanding gifts, his music, save for Dantons Tod, remains unaccountably neglected elsewhere. His death, however, may well encourage an overall

von Einem: a composer of outstanding gifts

particularly in a climate which has become especially inwhose early careers were dedicated to the overthrow of Gottfried von Einem, composer: born Berne, Switzerland 24 terested in those composers January 1918; married 1946 Lianne von Bismarck (one son), secondly Lotte Ingrisch; died Obernduembach, Austria Erik Levi 12 July 1996.

Births, Marriages & Deaths

BIRTHS

PIDGEON: On 18 June 1996, to Alison Pidgeon and Peter Reeves, a son, Samuel Dominick Reeves, a brother

Announcements for Gazette BIRTHS, MARRIAGES & DEATHS should be sent in writing to the Gazette Editor, The Independent, I Canada Square, Ca-The Independent, I Canada Square, Canary Wharf, London E14 5DL, tele-phoned to 0171-293 2011 (24-hour answering machine 0171-293 2012) or Exced to 0171-293 2010, and are charged at £6.50 a line (VAT extra).

ROYAL ENGAGEMENTS

The Queen and The Duke of Edinburgh attend a performance of the Royal Tour-nament, Earls Court, London SWS, The nament, Earls Court, London SWS, The Duke of Edinburgh visits Loughborough University of Technology, Loughborough, Leicestershire; visits Si Matthew's Com-munity Health and Social Care Centre, Leicester; opens Prince Philis Manager Leicester, opens Prince Philip House; opens the Leicester YMCA Aylestone Resential Centre; and onens the Southern Fire Station of Leicestershire Fire and Rescue Service, Leicester, Changing of the Guard The Household Cavalry Mounted Regi-ment mounts the Queen's Life Guard at Horse Guards, Ham; Ist Battalion Irish Guards mounts the Oueen's Guard, at Buckingham Palace, 11.30am, band pro-vided by the Welsh Guards. Birthdays

The Sultan of Brunei, 50; Professor Sir James Ball, economist, 63; Dr Jo-celyn Bell Burnell, astronomer, 53; Sir Harrison Birtwistle, composer, 62; Mr Julian Bream, guitarist, 63; Lord Buxton of Alsa, former chairman, Anglia Television, 78; Miss Carmen Callil, founder, Virago Press, 58; Mr Robert Conquest, author, 79; Pro-lessor Sir David Cox, former Warden of Nuffield College, Oxford, 72; Mr John Denham MP, 43; Sir Alexander Durie, a former vice-president of the Automobile Association, 81; Sir Malcolm Edge, former Deputy Master and Chairman, Board of Trinity House, 65; Air Marshal the Rev Sir Paterson Fraser, 89; Sir Simon Gourlay, former president, National Farmers' Union, 62; Sir John Graham, former diplomat, 70; Sir Ronald Hadfield, Chief Constable, West Midlands, 57; Mr Ralph Hammond Innes, novelist, 83; Mr Trevor Horn, songwriter, 47; Miss Ann Jellicoe, playwright and theatre director, 69; Mr Charles Kelly, chief constable, Staffordshire, 66; Sir Larry Lamb, former Editor, Daily Exvess, 67; Mr Henry McCubbin, MEP 54; Dame Iris Murdoch, nov elist, 77; Mrs Juliet Pannett, portrait painter, 85; Mrs Marion Roe MP, 60; Miss Linda Ronstadt, singer. 50; Mr Ron Smith, trade-unionist, 81; Professor Lord Winston, obstetrician and

Anniversaries

Births: Inigo Jones, architect, 1573;

and founder of the South Kensington Museum, 1808; Henry Edward Manning, Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster, 1808; Benno Adam, animal painter, 1812; Dame Marie Tempest. (Marie Susan Etherington) actress, 1864; Alfred Charles Willi Harmsworth, first Viscount Northcliffe, newspaper proprietor, 1865; Noel Gay (Richard Mozon Armitage), composer, 1898; Dorothy Fields, lyricist, 1905. Deaths Vladimir L Prince of Kiev, 1015; James Scott, Duke of Monmouth, il legitimate son of Charles II. execut ed 1685; Winthrop MacMackworth Praed, politician and poet, 1839; Karl Czerny, pianist and composer, 1857; William H. Bonney (alias Henry McCarty, or "Billy the Kid"), outlaw, shot by Sheriff Pat Garrett 1881; "General Tom Thumb' (Charles Sherwood Stratton), circus performer, 1883; Anton Pavlovich Chekhov, playwright and author, 1904; Emil Hermann Fischer chemist, 1919; John Joseph Pershing, soldier, 1948; Paul William Gallico writer, 1976; Margaret Mary Lock-wood, actress, 1990. On this day: Jerusalem was captured by the Cru-saders, 1099; the Battle of Tannenburg was fought between the Teutonic Knights and King Ladislas II of Poland, 1410; the Royal Society was granted a royal charter, 1662; the Marseillaise was adopted as the French National Anthem, 1795;

margarine was patented by Hippolyte Mège-Mouriès of Paris, 1869; social insurance came into effect in close-up pictures of Mars were transmitted by television from the Mariner IV satellite, 1965; in Cyprus, Archhishop Makarios was deposed as president in a coup by Greek officers of the Cyprus National Guard, 1974.

Today is the Feast Day of St Athanasius of Naples, St Barhadbesaba, St Bonaventure, St David of Munktorp. St Donald. St Edith of Polesworth, St Pompilio Pirrotti, St Swithin and

Britain, 1912; Alcoholics Anonymous was founded in Britain, 1948:

Lectures Victoria and Albert Museum: Charlotte Cotton, "Aspects of the Photo-graphic Collection in the Print Room", 2.30pm.

Kent Wing, Air Training Corps Air Chief Marshal Sir Andrew Wilson was the guest of honour at a din-ner held on Saturday evening by Kent Wing, Air Training Corps at Ton-bridge School, Tonbridge, Kent. Sqn Ldr A.J. Simpson presided.

Appointments

Mr Justice Morison, to be President of the Employment Appeal Tribunal. Mr Justice Kirkwood and Mr Justice Lindsay, to be judges of the Employment Appeal Tribunal. Dr Brian Manley, to be President of the Institute of Physics. Sir Jack Jacob, to be an Honorary Fellow of the Academy of Experts.

The following notes of judgments were prepared by the re-porters of the All England Law Reports.

Conduct money Union Bank of Finland Ltd v Lelakis; QBD Comm Ct (Langley J) 11 June 1996.

A judgment debtor who had been served a notice under RSC Ord 48, r 1 to attend an examination before a master as to his means was not entitled to object to attending on the ground that conduct money had not been tendered to him, because the judgment credi-tor's solicitor had adequately tendered it by giving an un-dertaking in a letter to pay the debtor's reasonable costs of such attendance and by giving the notice in reasonable time before the return date.

Andrew Hochhauser. Pertida Cargill-Thompson (Vatson Farley & Williams) for the planniffs, Steven Gee QC, Vasanti Selvaramam (Holman Ferwick & Willan) for the defendant.

R v Ireland; CA (Crim Div) (Swinton Thomas LJ, Tucker, Douglas Brown JJ) 14 May 1996. The making of silent teleCASE SUMMARIES 15 July 1996

the purposes of the offence of assault occasioning actual bodily harm contrary to s 47 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861. The act consisted in the making of the call and it did not matter whether words or silence ensued.

Philip Richards (assigned by the Registrar of Criminal Appeals) for the appellant; Christopher Llwellyn-Jones QC, Roger Griffiths (CPS) for the

Extradition

Re Chetta: QB Div Ct (Henry LJ, Ebsworth J) 6 June 1996. For the purposes of s 16 of the Extradition Act 1989, judicial review proceedings were instituted when a notice of motion applying for leave to apply for judicial review was made and lodged with the Crown Office, since that showed that the applicant has sought the court's protection. The Home Secretary's policy not to give reasons for ordering a fugitive offender's return to a requesting country until after leave had been granted was ar- charterer to the nominated phone calls was capable of guably wrong, since the re- account of the time-charterer to enable a potential applicant to know the grounds relied on by the Home Secretary so he could decide whether to apply for judicial review.

The applicants in person in the habeas corpus proceedings; James Lewis, James Hardy (Andrew McCooey. Sittingbourne) for the upplicants in the judicial review proceedings; Rabinder Singh (Treasury Solicitor) for the respondent.

Shipping India Steamship Co v Louis Dreyfus Sugar Co Ltd; the Indian Reliance; QBD Comm Ct (Rix J) 11

The owner of a sub-chartered vessel was not entitled to intercept bills of lading to claim the freight and lien the subcharterer's cargo on the basis of freight being unpaid. The phrase "freight payable as per charterparty" in the bills of lading meant not only the rate of freight but all the details of the payment clause of the subcharter. Accordingly, payment of the freight by the subamounting to a relevant act for quirement to give reasons was amounted to payment under the charter. Therefore the owner was not entitled to claim the freight from the sub-charterer even though the timecharterer had not paid the time charter hire and had become insolvent.

Angus Glennie QC (Zaiwolla & Co) for the plaintiffs: Anthony Havelock-Allan QC (Richards Butler) for the

Johnson (HMIT) v Prudential Assurance Co Ltd: ChD (Robert Walker J) 15 May 1996.

Certain management expenses which were deductible in a Sch D, case 1 calculation were not deductible in an assessment to corporation tax made on an income minus expenses calculation. By virtue of s 75(1) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 expenses could not be deducted which were deductible in computing profits apart from this section". Therefore the taxpayer was not entitled to deduct the expenses which were deductible in both a Sch D, case 1 loss calculation and an income minus expenses calculation.

Christopher McCall (Inland Revemic) for the Crown; Peter Whacman QC (Group Legal Services, Prudential Corp plc) for the taxpayer.

Why chartists expect Footsie at 4,000 by the end of August

Could Footsie nudge 4,000 points by the end of next month? A fascinating thought in view of the tremors of last

Chris Chaitow, chartist at Robert Fleming Securities, is the man putting his head on the block by suggesting such a Chartists, of course, plot the past to predict the future. And it is a study of Footsie since it was launched 12 years ago that has allowed Mr Chaitow to arrive at his conclusion.

Last month Footsie fell for six consecutive days. It was only the tenth time such a run had oc-curred. The Fleming man says after most of the 10 retreats shares were up a month later. This time round they have performed true to form. But, more importantly, two months after uity markets is up anyway but these results are two-to-three times the moves one would expect under normal conditions."

In chartist speak there is, however, one unhelpful influence. The June six-day fall took Footsie below 3,700 - a crucial support level.

Mr Chaitow goes with the bull case and, with Footsie going above 3,700 since the slide, "the potential if the signal works is that it could be very close to 4,000 by the end of August".

Chartists do not enjoy universal support. Many look upon them as odd-ball characters, even cranks, surrounded and mesmerised by charts. before he became a minus-mil-

There is a deep scepticism about the value of their work. A jibe by Jim Slater, in the days

Says Mr Chaitow: "Of course, the natural trend of equipment houses are prepared to ignore. houses are prepared to ignore. Most have chartists on their books with, for example, Richard Lake at SBC Warburg and Robin Griffiths at James Caple enjoying, like Mr. Chaitow, wide followings.

Fund managers have also become more optimistic, according to a survey by Merrill Lynch. For the first half of the year bears were in the ascendancy but in recent months fund managers have said they intend to increase their UK exposure. Investment house year-end Footsie forecasts are generally unchanged. Société Générale Strauss Turnbull is on 3,900 to 4,100; James Capel goes for 4,000; so does Charterhouse Tilney. NatWest Securities looks for 3,700 and Goldman

STOCK MARKET WEEK

DEREK PAIN

Stock market reporter of the year

used to circulate.

far removed from the colourful, even exotic creations which

The advent of Crest could be regarded as yet further discouragement for private investors. Whether that will turn

Private investors have three choices. Carry on as normal and hope companies continue to issue certificates; operate through a stockbrokers' nominee account, which means they will be lumped in with others and lose almost all shareholders'

less share settlement system, will be launched today. Initially it will embrace only 14 companies, with English China Clays the largest.

The 14 have been selected to give Crest a spread of experience. First settlements on the electronic system will be on 19 August. Other stocks will be quickly pulled in and the £25m system, successor to the ill-fated Taurus which was abandoned in 1993 after costing £400m, should be handling 95 per cent of share transactions by the end of April.

After then, it would not be surprising if there is eventually heap much on top of the initial membership fee. Some brokers say their sponsorship will be free.

Such a set-up should not be too discriminatory against the private investor. However, the market's obvious desire at least to keep pace with markets around the world does mean life is becoming more difficult for the small man while the

Yet the private investor remains the lifeblood of small stockbrokers. They still represent a substantial number of the market's bargains although in valuation terms they are dwarfed by institutional power.

With settlement periods being reduced - instant settlement eventually - the oldfashioned share certificate might not, therefore, last much longer, except when it is tucked away in a drawer by an investor who rarely, if ever, trades and is content to concentrate on dividend payments.

British Telecom, with first quarter figures, and Bulmer, the cider group, are among companies which have so far signalled profit announcements this week. Bulmer, the Woodpecker and Strongbow group which is still the country's biggest cider each member. So the broker should not, in theory, need to tinues to increase. expected to produce outstanding figures on Wednesday. Sachs is on £27.5m, which would represent a £2.5m advance. In March, Bulmer consolidated its position as number one when it splashed out £23.3m for Inch's cider, the biggest independent with a 7 per cent market share. BT has first quarter figures, also on Wednesday. An announcement tomorrow involving BAA, the airports group, could, however, have a much bigger share impact. The Civil Aviation Authority is expected to produce a new pricing package for BAA's south-eastern airports. With regulators getting more aggres-sive there is always the fear BAA could face much tighter controls than is generally expected. But Lehman Brothers is relaxed, ex-pecting CAA moves to have only a modest impact on BAA's profits, which analyst Guy Kekwick

BUSINESS NEWS DESK: tel 0171-293 2636 fax 0171-293 2098

US approvals allow Lloyd's rescue to go ahead

Financial Editor

Lloyd's has cleared the last tegulatory hurdle ahead of its key annual meeting in London today, confirming vesterday that it had received the approval mittee of US regulators on of just enough US securities regulators to allow its £3.1bn rescue to go ahead. By a deadline for agreement set at 0100 British Summer Time yesterday morning. Lloyd's managed to win the approval of regulators in states where 84 per cent of US mem-

above the minimum required for the agreement to take effect. A number of US states, including Missouri, refused to sign up over the weekend to the £40m deal, which had been agreed in outline with a com-

Thursday afternoon. The annual meeting in the Royal Festival Hall today will be asked to approve a £440m con-tribution by 34.000 members to series of votes on the package by action groups and individual members which stretch out to the end of August.

An extraordinary general meeting in the same venue, requested by rebel members, will also vote today on motions to improve the offer substantially. The Lloyd's authorities expect, on the basis of opinion polls, to win both votes comfortably, but if they lose the rescue attempt may have to be be

The US committee had little more than 48 hours to win the signatures of individual US states and Lloyd's intends to try offer to US names by more than to persuade those that have not 20 per cent, giving them a bet-ulators refusing could still be signed to change their minds. 20 per cent, giving them a bet-ulators refusing could still be signed to change their minds. Lioyd's had been forced to membership.

negotiate with the US securities regulators because they had issued a series of orders that had the effect of blocking the rescue offer to the insurance market's 2,700 US members, a minority of the 34,000 total. Lloyd's agreed to pay up to £40m to the US regulators in return for their agreement to drop all actions against the use the money to improve the Confirmed acceptances include seven states where 1,674 members reside, 62 per cent of the US total. These are New York with 321 and California, with 555 - the two biggest - as well as Louisiana, Colorado, . Texas, Illinois and Florida.

As well as gaining 80 per cent coverage of members. Lloyd's insisted that 18 named states sign up. Because many states have small numbers of members, the actual number of reg-quite large. Missouri, which refused, has 67 members.

A rejection by regulators covering 16 per cent of Lloyd's US members would only marginally reduce the cost of the deal. Last week, Ron Sandler, Lloyd's chief executive, said that if rejections amounted to up to 15 per cent, the credits would be recycled to regulators that did approve the deal. Beyoud that level, the package will be reduced pro-rata. Mr Sandler described the agreement to give US names

'uncomfortable choice' In a statement issued in New York, Peter Lane, managing director of Lloyd's in North America, said: "We believe this agreement with securities regulators recognises our mutual regulatory concerns and presents a sound and practical way to resolve all outstanding state disputes regarding Lloyd's." He added that it was unfortunate that some regulators had not yet acted to gain the benefits for Lloyd's members

British Energy: Flotation ends in more controversy as leaks are found at flagship reactor

Nuclear sale goes through at half price

PATRICK TOOHER

British Energy will this morning stagger across the finishing line to begin life as a publicly quoted company, valued at just £1.41bn, less than half initial expectations and lower than even the most pessimistic forecasts at the weekend.

The final figure of 203p a share for institutional investors and 198p for individuals is right at the bottom of the range indi-

	•
Basis of allocation
No. of shares applied for (by	No. of share shop applicants)	shares received
300	300
400	400
; 500 ; 600	420 431
700	450
800	465
900	480
1000 1500	495 540
2000	570
2500	600
3000	nil (

cated by the Government just a few weeks ago. And the amount raised is only half the cost of huilding Sizewell B, the flagship nuclear power station at the centre of the latest in a series of safety scares that has dogged the privatisation process.

The sell-off, abandoned

seven years ago because of City fears about the huge cost of decommissioning nuclear power stations and disposing of radioactive waste, ended as it had begun - in controversy - after it emerged that a third nuclear power station being privatised had been closed because of safety concerns.

But British Energy, which runs the eight most modern nuclear power stations, denied the lower price was a result of adverse investor reaction to the recent shutdowns.

It is tightly priced but the markets did us absolutely no favours," a spokeswoman said. Wall Street had a dreadful week while the UK market was also down." Announcing the share price. Tim Eggar, the energy minister, also put a brave face on the outcome: "I they bid for. Applications for the power station has been out of

Sizewell B: The third nuclear power station under British Energy closed due to safety reasons Photograph: Brian Harris am delighted with the success of the sale. We have completed the final stage of privatising the electricity industry and in the process raised more than £2bn for the taxpayer." Mr Eggar's calculation of the proceeds includes £700m of debt that British Energy will carry on its halance sheet. BZW, the investment bank handling the sale of British Energy, said a total of 606,000 people had applied for 443 million shares, making the retail offer 2.4 times oversubscribed. In total, the number of shares being offered to the public has been increased to 52 per cent.

Some 40 per cent of all applicants will receive all the shares minimum 300 or 400 shares will be met in full, while higher bids were marginally scaled down. The 275 million shares reserved for the international offer were oversubscribed by about 2.4 times. Just under half will go to UK institutions and about 20 per cent to US investors. The controversial privatisation received another blow yesterday when British Energy confirmed faults had been discovered in the reactor at Sizewell B, its flagship station. It said leaks had been discovered in "at least one and no more than five of the fuel

pins - the alloy tubes which contain uranium. The reactor at the Suffolk action since 28 June, when it was shut down for routine mainte-nance. Its timetable for a 45-day shutdown would mean the reactor should be back in operation on 12 August, said a

There is no suggestion the problem with the pins will cause any undue delay. There is no reason to suppose any eco-nomic impact," she said. The news follows the revelation last week that reactors at two other nuclear power stations were being shut down so engineers could check for cracks. British Energy announced the closure of one reactor at Hinkley Point B in Somerset earlier this month after a crack

But on Wednesday evening the company revealed it had decided to close down another, identical, reactor at Hinkley Point B and two identical reactors at Hunterston B in Ayrshire as a precaution.

The decision was made public just hours after the offer of shares to members of the pubhe closed, prompting claims by Labour that the Government was guilty of "organised deceit" by suppressing the information until after the crucial deadline has passed. Labour has called for a Commons debate on the nuclear sell-off on Tuesday.

News of Sizewell B's closure is likely to reinforce City fears that associated safety risks make British Energy a risky investment.

Standard Life to curb sales commissions

NIC CICUTTI

Standard Life, the largest mutual insurer in Europe, is seeking to cap the commissions it pays financial advisers, in a bid to break the rising spiral of payments made by the financial services industry to sellers of life and pensions products.

The company said the upper ceiling on commissions was likely to be fixed at 40 per cent above a norm first set by Lautro.

the former industry regulator. The decision follows a number of reports showing that advisers' commission scales have been rising substantially in the sions in 1990. This became known as "100 per cent of Lautro" and was formally scrapped after being declared anti-competitive by the Office of Fair Trading. Even today, however, commissions are linked to the old Lautro scales.

Much of the recent increases have been driven by large national brokerages. They argue they should be paid more for the poli-cies they sell because the volume of business they generate means economies of sale for individual insurers. In many cases, they have driven the rate up to 140 or even 150 per cent of Lautro.

Some advisers are believed to be earning even higher amounts. up to 25 per cent more than was commonly paid three years ago.
Although Standard Life declined to give exact figures, industry sources said that for a typical £100 a month mortzage-linked endowment policy, the commission payment was roughly £1,100. On the same scale, a personal pension scheme for the same monthly amount might involve a com-mission of just under £900.

Standard Life's decision

comes as the industry begins to recover from a three-year slump on sales, partly caused by the personal pension mis-selling scandal. Consumer groups have claimed poor advice is often driven by commission-hungry salesforces.

Benny Higgins, deputy general manager of sales at Standard Life, said: "Our view is that we should act in partnership with independent financial advisers. from whom we receive 86 per cent of our business, so that the market can thrive.

We do not think it is in the interests of the market to be in a [situation] where providers outbid each other all the time.

past three years.

Lantro first decided to set a limit on salespeople's commis win market share. There is anecdotal evidence that this is happening on an increasing scale.

Mr Higgins said the higher commissions being paid were partly caused by the inability of some companies to compete within the market on the more important areas of financial strength, performance and overall charges levied on their products. His discussions with IFAs indicated the vast majority supported Standard Life's decision.

Amanda Davidson, a partner at Holden Meehan, a leading firm of financial advisers in London, said: "Generally, I have little problem with what Standard Life is doing if the commissions saved are used to enhance the products on offer to policyholders.

The danger is that it may not happen. The problem Standard Life may face is that if large brokerages see no substantial difference between one of its products and that of a rival paying more commission, they will go to the rival." She said her company is prepared to operate on a fee-paying basis and rebate commission back to customers.

In Brief

 Several leading British companies are using potentially misleading accounting policies six years after a body was set up to tighten up the rules, a book published this week claims. The second edition of Accounting for Growth, by controversial stockbroker Terry Smith, includes an examination of Carlton Communications, the fast-growing media group headed by Michael Green. Mr Smith says the company is "very open" about the amount of goodwill it has written off following a series of acquisitions, but he points out that when it reports its results under US accounting rules, the performance is not nearly as impressive as under UK rules in 1995 a return on average equity of 4.6 per cent, as opposed a Paris hotel, is to be buried at a Jewish cemetery in London after a private service tomorrow. Up to 600 family and friends are expected to gather for the service at a prayer hall at the Liberal Jewish Cemetery in Willesden at noon. French investigators concluded that Mr Rothschild committed suicide by hanging himself in a bathroom at the Hotel Bristol. He left no note and an inquest will be held in England.

⁹ The financier Amschel Rothschild, who committed suicide in • German media group Bertelsmann said it was considering a pro-posal from its television company RTL to list 49.9 per cent of RTL on the German stock exchange. A Bertelsmann spokesman, confirming a report in a German current affairs magazine, said the idea was not new but was unable to give further details. Bertels-mann recently completed a merger between its Ufa television subsidiary and that of CLT, the Luxembourg broadcaster, which between them control RTL, the leading German TV channel, A pay-TV alliance between Bertelsmann and three other media companies, including the UK's BSkyB, collapsed earlier this month.

• French President Jacques Chirac told voters anxious over near record unemployment and corruption scandals that it would take time and adaptation for France to recover from an economic slowdown. In an hour-long Bastille Day television interview, Mr Chirac said there was no miracle solution to France's problems. However, he promised tax cuts would be made this September as part of the 1997 budget, which will also cut French government spending.

Business optimism takes a knock

MATHEW HORSMAN

Indicators of business opti-mism tumbled across the board, reaching a three-year low, according to the latest survey by Dun & Bradstreet, published today. Confidence about the level of sales profits, employment and new orders everywhere but dropped

The proportion of businesses xpecting a fall in new orders in the third quarter of 1996 climbed to 40.5 per cent, compared with 33.5 per cent in the second quarter. Stocks are not being increased, due to the expectations of sluggish demand. Dunn & Bradstreet will argue.

"The deterioration in optimism for new orders bodes ill for the Chancellor's hopes of GDP growth reaching 2.5 per cent in 1996," Philip Mellor, senior analyst at D&B, said. But, he added, inflationary pressures were likely to remain low, leaving scope for interest rate cuts aimed at stimulating economic growth. .

The survey, based on data from 1.800 directors from around the UK, casts further doubts on the Government's revised economic forecast of 2.5 per cent growth through

In Wales, optimism for increased profits was markedly more positive than in the rest of the country, with 61 per cent of those surveyed believing profits would be higher in the third quarter. The survey predates the announcement of Lucky Goldstar's investment in Wales last

The prospects for employment were less positive, with at least 40 per cent of firms across the country expecting to reduce staff over the third quarter.

Broken down by sector, the survey data showed manufacturers as being more bullish. with those expecting higher profits in the third quarter rising to 50 per cent from about 40 per cent in the second

The regional picture was mixed, with London and the South-east showing a sharp fall across all sectors, as did the Eastern region. But the East Midlands was somewhat resistant to the trend, with 77 per cent of firms expecting to increase sales over the next

Shareholder rejects Campari liquidation

MAGNUS GRIMOND

A row is about to break out over the recent decision to call in liq-uidators at Campari, the sports and leisure group.

The move, which came after the failure of plans for a capital injection from a private textile company, will be opposed by at least one substantial private shareholder at a meeting tomorrow to approve the appointment of Neville Kahn of Coopers & Lybrand as liquidator.

The shareholder claimed last week that secured loan stock holders in the company had pushed for the liquidation, while 1,000 small shareholders would see their money disappear. He questioned who would be best served by this process. "Why was this route chosen?

Will the loan stock holders get all their money back? There be an explanation." The leading investor in tast year's £2.3m rescue issue of convertible loan stock was the Hong Kong-based Wing Tai Exporters and menswear group Gieves, which is linked to Wing Tai. At the time, they were proposing to subscribe up to Seventy-five per cent of the doesn't seem to be an explana- votes controlled by those tion and I think there ought to attending tomorrow's meeting are required for the liquidation to go ahead.

Around 52 per cent of the ordinary shares are in the hands of Wing Tai (29 per cent) and a company under the control of Paul Thompson, the chairman of Sanderson Electronics, a Sheffield-based computer support company, which owns 23

OK interest rates 物的内侧多种种间 right yield corbs 0-30 year bend(%)* 1 Month Medium Boad (%) Long Bearl (Nillbar Age 1 Har 5.94 8.28 6.17 0,44 1.00 3.63 Rises - Top 5 Price (d) 184's Clay (d) % Change | Falls - Top 5 | Price (d) 184's Clay (d) % Change 10 6.5 British Biotech 302 15 6.0 Chiroscience Group 346 25 5.5 ML Laboratories 373 Tomkins 200 British Sky Brdest 478

INTEREST RATES

CURRENCIES Heek's City Trace 1,5523 -0.28c 1,5645 Ejlondon 0 6442 +0.12 0.639 1.5530 -0.40c 1,5665 EjN York) 0.6439 +0.16 0.638 1,5523 -0.28c 1,5645 DM (London) 2.3635 -1 26pf 2.425 DM (London) ♥ (London) 171.778 ¥0.654 156.09 ♥ (London) 86.4 -0.3 88.5 $ index

1.5226 -0.54pi 1.55 110.660 -Y0.225 99.77 Close Week's sky Year Age Index Latest Yr Ago Heat Figs 153.0 +2.1pc149.8 15 Aug Oil Brent $ 20.00 +0.26 ___15.78 RPI__

384.55 +2.90 389.40 GDP 130.3 +1pc125.2 25 247.73 +2.31 244.05 Base Raies — 5.75pc 5.75 —

130.3 +1pc125.2 26 July

Network

The I.T. marketplace for the latest news in computing and telecommunications with pages of career opportunities in these expanding industries.

See Network the 16 page special I.T. pullout in section two

To book your advertisement call The Network Team on 0171 293 2312

Every Monday in the THE INDEPENDENT

section two

JOHNSON

Eurosceptics have so far supported the Chancelior's Maastricht policy. because it fits in with their own views about the need to curb the public sector. But principles vanish when political survival is at stake

Tax-cutting policies will lose the markets' vote

I. the last year or two managed to make his backbenchers - if not the voters - feel good about his policies, while staying on course to meet the Maastricht convergence criteria in 1997. This balancing act is becoming increasingly precarious. Mr Clarke will have a difficult choice in the November Budget.

His Summer Economic Forecast last week was presented to the European Union's finance ministers the day before. It showed that the UK, though not doing as well as predicted, was hoping to scrape through most of the cri-teria, but with virtually no margin of error.

As the finance ministers warned, this means no tax cuts or spending increases in the Budget. Yet if the Government gets through to November, there will be enormous pressure on the Chancellor to cut taxes. He has endorsed the EU warning, but he will be accused of botching the election if he refuses to cut taxes under what looks like pressure from Brussels. The table shows the UK barely meeting the criteria. Inflation is the easy one, and most members of the EU are expected to pass it. Even so, the Treasury's 2.25 per cent forecast looks optimistic with a consumer boom. Other forecasters go for 2.5 per cent, which is only 0.6 per cent below the likely limit of 3.1 per cent.

The long-term interest rate test is easy too, because it allows for a limit of 2 per cent above the three best countries. If the present gap of 1.5 per cent between UK gilts at 8 per cent, and French and German bonds at 6.5 per cent continues, it will not be so wide as to keep the UK out. The best that can be said for the UK's government debt is that it is expected to stay within the 60 per cent of GDP limit,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has in | if only for the next year or so. But it has been rising rapidly towards it.

The crucial criterion is the general government deficit limit of 3 per cent of GDP in 1997. As Treasury forecasts deteriorate, the achievement of this target has been postponed by a year. It will now need good luck with the forecast and a fudge of the calendar.

The Treasury predicts that the financial deficit will be 3 per cent of GDP in 1997/98.

It will be higher in calendar 1997, the year to which the criterion applies; outside forecasters put it at 3.7 per cent, and the Treasury's implicit forecast is 3.25 per cent. Such figures might just be acceptable. As France and Germany may need some fractional flexibility themselves, they can hardly deny it to the UK.

This leaves the exchange rate stability criterion. Most other countries say that the UK has to be in the exchange rate mechanism for 1997 and 1998 to qualify. With the present 15 per cent bands, this would not be economically difficult, but it would still be politically impossible. If the UK case that there are other ways of measuring stability is accepted, the pound/ mark rate may not behave 100 badly.

The Eurosceptics have so far supported the Chancellor's Maastricht policv, because it fits in with their own views about the need to curb the public sector. But principles vanish when political survival is at stake. The Chancellor gave in to political pressure unnecessarily in last November's Budget by cutting taxes by 0.5 per cent of GDP. This made it harder to reduce the deficit, came too long before the election to have any political pay-off, and whetted the backbenchers' appetite for more of the same.

If Mr Clarke believes his own growth forecast of 3.25 per cent in 1997 it will be irresponsible to cut taxes. He will probably try to get away with just cutting short-term interest rates, which may look low to us, with 5.75 per cent base rates, but are still a full 2 percentage points above French and German rates. If the Chancellor ends up with looser monetary policy, and then looser fiscal policy as well, the financial markets, if not the electorate, will vote against him. We will be seen to have opted out of the single currency, longterm interest rates will go up, and the exchange rate will go down.

Convergence forecasts for 1997

Limits: Inflation 1.5 per cent above three best forecasts, long-term interest rates 2 per cent above three best forecasts.

Notes: I. Treasury RPI less mortgage interest, others consumer price deflator. 2. Yield on 10-year government bonds; Treasury takes recent levels as forecast. 3. As per cent of GDP.

As per cent of GDP; Treasury derived from 1996-97 and

2.5

8.4

56

3.7

3.1

60.

3.0

after a brief interlude of success outside the European monetary club. As Mr Clarke, if not his colleagues, has understood, joining the euro, far from ending the recovery, will help to prolong it. Outting government deficits can, in some cases, stimulate economic growth by means of lower interest rates, contrary to the Keynesian conventional wisdom. The OECD and the IMF have recently published studies of fiscal consolidation demonstrating this point. To take an example near home, Ireland currently has an economic growth rate averaging 6 per cent, after reducing its budget deficit from over 10 per cent to 2.5 per cent of GDP.

If the UK can get its government deficit and debt moving downwards con-vincingly, it will get the same benefit of lower long-term interest rates that countries expected to join the single currency are already getting. If long-term interest rates fell by 2 per cent, there would be a saving of £17bn on servicing the national debt, and the government > of GDP. Sluggish business investment would at last pick up. If the UK fails the convergence tests, its treatment at the hands of the financial markets will be more severe than if it passes but still decides not to join the euro. If it passes the tests, it would be perverse to have gone

deficit would fall by 1 per cent

The British economy may run out of luck | adjustment, and then abstain from reaping the full benefits offered by the single currency.

The markets would assume that, if we were so attached to our freedom to devalue that we stayed out of the euro, we would be more likely than not to use it. They would not wait to find out, but mark the pound down. This time, devaluation would be more likely to bring inflation in its wake than during the recession in 1992, and the UK might cease to meet even the inflation criterion.

In theory, going it alone on the path of fi-nancial virtue is an option for the UK. But the present uneasy cat-and-dog menage of Chancellor and Governor is unstable. If the Chancellor again overrules the Governor, and cuts interest rates, it will be seen as political interference in monetary policy such as an independent central bank is designed to avoid. Politicians do not want an independent Bank of England, but they may get better monetary policy from an independent European Central Bank.

Joining the single currency is a historic decision. It is a triumph of hope over experience to suggest that we have succeeded in reversing the post-War decline in the pound in any permanent way. The plaudits heaped on Alan Greenspan's wise management of the US Federal Reserve indicate that we would do better to take the pound out of party politics and pool it in the euro under a European Central Bank accountable to national and European parliaments.

Christopher Johnson, a former chief economist of Lloyds Bank, is author of In with the Euro, out with the Pound: the Single Currency for through the short-term pain of | Britain', published by Penguin on 19 July

A superstar professor fights a lone crusade against the onslaught of fashionable economic notions. He spoke to Diane Coyle

Inflation(1)

interest rate(2)

Government

Gross government

Long-term

debts(3)

2 *.2*5

8.0

3.25 3.7

Keeping the barbarians at bay

Most people, if they have an troage of an economics professor at all, will probably think of some shambling chap who is marked above all by his inability to communicate with normal

Paul Krugman, one of the world's superstar economics professors, is a researcher in the field of economic geography. But he is utterly unable to give me directions to his office: he does not know where it is exactly. So far, so good for the stereotype.

However, Professor Krug- for the policy wonks man is overwhelmingly able to communicate. His conversation is fast and funny, refreshing in a profession still recycling jokes that date back to Adam Smith. He expresses superbly trenchant opinions about economics - and economists.

Some of the latter are a mite taken to task Lester Thurow, whom he will be joining as a colleague at the Massachusetts: Institute of Technology in the autumn, for not being very good with numbers and stumbling over economic basics. In an essay criticising one of Professor Thurow's books on America's competitive struggle, he said: "Everyone makes mistakes, although it is surprising when men who are supposed to be experts on international competition do not have even a rough idea of the size of the US trade deficit."

The contretemps stems from Professor Krugman's rejection of Thurow's pessimistic views about the "globalisation" of the world economy - "glob-aloney" as he describes it. For the past three years, Paul Krugman has waged war against

Television in the United States will take a tentative step along the information highway this ming with the launch of an ambitious 24-hour news service operated jointly by the NBC network and the computer systems

Formed from a $500m joint months ago, the new channel

will attempt to challenge directly

Cable Network News (CNN),

which has had the field virtually to itself in 24-hour news programming since its foundation

16 years ago.

The birth of the new service, to be known as MSNBC, is likely to trigger a fierce battle in the industry for news viewers globally.

Rupert Murdoch's Fox television

behemoth. Microsoft Corp.

the fashionable notions that countries are engaged in a com-petitive light to the finish (countries do not go out of business, he points out) and that trade is somehow bad for the Western industrial nations.

"I had to turn from advancing the frontier to fighting a rearguard action," is how he describes his diversion from the academic ivory tower to the rough and tumble of public policy. "I now have a lot more respect who say the same sensible things again and again, I am tired of having to defend the basics of logic against well-funded

The barbarians are those who blame foreigners - it used to be nomic geography. This is a the Japanese, now any other productive Asians - for America's fessor Krugman has resuscitateconomic woes. These are, var- ed almost single-handedly. It is iously, the shrinking manufacturing base, the trade deficit, downsizing and unemployment, and falling wages at the bottom end of the income scale. Professor Krugman points out that the manufacturing sector has been in decline for half a century, as in all the industrial countries. The US unemployment rate is one of the lowest in the West. He goes on to calculate how big a part the trade deficit could have played in destroying jobs in manufacturing and reducing blue collar wages. The figures suggest it cannot have been very much as the US has not traded enough with cheap labour countries for them to account for more than a small fraction of the losses. He agrees about the direction of the effects the fashionable pessimists worry about, but not the size. "The big questions about trade and technology are a bit like global warming," he says. "The principle is not in doubt, but it is a question of scale." This makes tting the numbers wrong the height of irresponsibility. He is still frequently invited to business conferences to represent the voice of reason against the barbarian tide - of barriers between regions.

the two countries and the near-

These clusters become self-susand usually finds himself in a mi-taining and very specialised. For example, Silicon THE MONDAY INTERVIEW Valley in California and Route 128 in

PAUL KRUGMAN Massachusetts are both important centres for information nority of one, he adds. Howevtechnology businesses. But Silier, welcome as this work is as a con Valley specialises in stand-supplement to an academic alone PCs, while Route 128 salary, his interest now is ecofocuses on mainframes running dumb terminals and the very simonce-defunct subject that Proilar network technology.

Professor Krugman observes that because of the absence of internal barriers, US regions are even described as the New Economic Geography these days.
Understanding regional much more specialised than European ones. The US has Hollywood: each European economies is an extension of his country has its own movie ininterest in international trade. dustry. As barriers to trade and The difference between a region movement in Europe are reand a country lies in the absence moved, there will be economic pressure to concentrate movie-Barriers between nations do making in one location, he prenot have to be very high to alter dicts. "If Europe goes that way we are talking about massive ineconomic behaviour. For in-stance, there is at least 10 times as much trade between Canadian dustrial restructuring. And if provinces as between a Canadian Europe becomes as integrated province and a US state, despite the cultural similarities between in economics as the US but not

cation. The reason is that economies of scale, along with spillover effects such as the exchange of technical know-how and creation of a skilled labour pool, tend to favour clusters of

ed, especially by management experts such as Michael Porter.

very similar businesses. The phenomenon is well-document-worry about." complete freedom to trade across the border. "In a place What's more, European cities where a border ought not to mat-ter it clearly does," he says. are smaller than they would be if the Continent were all one Economic theory predicts that country. "Europe ought to have a city of 30 million people. What regions will develop specialisawould the French do if it turned tions once the process is start-

as politically integrated there will be some obvious things to ed by accidents of history and lo- out not to be Paris?" he ponders Cardiff and Edinburgh, he points out, are smaller than they ought to be for the size of the Welsh and Scottish economies, mainly because Britain is such a centralised country with an outof-proportion capital.

"Devolution could be bad for London," he warns. But would it be good or bad for Welsh and Scottish bids to attract inward investment? Professor Krugman replies with an anecdote. "I have given the southernmost economics lecture in history, in Tierra del Fuego - although it was on the north side of town, so somebody could still give one on the south side of town.

Visiting the end of the earth to lecture Argentine businessmen, he expected to find that fishing was the dominant local industry. Not at all, it turned out to be electronics, thanks to investment incentives provided by the Argentine government.

The moral is that tax breaks can temper the strongest economic forces. It looks a safe bet that research into the apparently abstract field of economic geography will not keep the crusading Professor Krugman out of policy controversies for very long. And economic policy will be the better for it.

BUSINESS TO BUSINESS

Opportunities

CANCELLED EXPORT ORDER Means Funtastic Savings! Plus Many More Fabalous Bargalus To Ch Discreet Bugging and De-Bugging Equipment Limited Period Only While Club Tel: Streetwise

For a Free Catalogue and information on Free membership of De-Stocking imporations' 1642 676 942
1851: 17 Yerm Road
First Come Stockion, Cleve
TS18 3NJ First Served! England

Opportunities

OWN OR WANT TO OWN A RETAIL BUSINESS?

Start or expand your retail business in our 64 retail centres across the UK. it couldn't be easier!

Some on going concerns available Possible help with fixtures & fittings Established customer footfalls Low risk, low capital investment for new-start busin

For details of locations and availability call free on 1114 0800 833079

DO YOU LIKE TO

creditors for your ellouis es for just.

No Com edition & Daick Cash Flow Mediation and debt negotiation is one of the LRCs fastest growing yet least known consultancy areas, offering phenomenal income potential, no competition

Average £3,500 Per Case Established 30 years in the UK and US, we earn substantial fees ding amicable settlements negotisting amicable settlements between debitots and creditors over problem debts which we are able to reduce by up to 70%.

and quick cash flow.

about our Associate Training Programme and have £8,900

0171 225 3755

We offer excellent training

(can include a partner) and full business back-up, supported by skilled debt mediation

If you would like to know more

VMCOR

Nationwide for TWO feature illins & various productions Any sign, shape or size inc children. For immediate shadhy send large S.A.E. so: The Casting Dept.(N) Gibros Hsa, Lets. LET 2AA GFEER GLOSES IN 14 DAYS)

HOW TO LEGALLY

For Free Information contact: Scope International Ltd, Box 6327 Forestside House, Rowlands Castle,

Hants, PO9 6EE Tel: 01705 631751 Fax: 01705 631322

2nd Passports • Tax - Free Cars • Secret Banking

CASH FLOW OPPORTUNITY Highly Profitable One Person Operation No Selling 4-5 Hours Per Week

For Free Information Pack FREECALL 0500 827 853

3 INTO 1 CAN GO! A SUPERB 3 HIGH DEMAND Product Ranges TOYS - SPICES - ECO PRODUCTS Exclusive Artig. • Operate from Home Full or Part-time • No need for a Van TELEPHONE FOR FREE INFO FACK ON 01452 532419 Free Land

FREE LAND and HOUSES

How to claim corner legal ownership by the man who wrote the original book as featured on BEC TV

Factsheet and femiatalogue available fot an 🤫 + NAE from Farrshare Estates, PO Box 35

Felganie

NOTICE TO READERS

While: we take reasonable precautions with 2" actorizements, readers are strongly advised to take professional advise before parana a depoit or exterio ; to ser financial eramanest company is also preparing to join the fray with its own all-news channel later this summer. Similar plans were recently shelved by ABC, owned by Disney, because of inflated costs.

To advertise in this section please call 0171 293 2338.

MSNBC is attracting intense curiosity also because of its promise to fuse traditional television viewing with the Internet. An interactive version of the cato news service will be carried simultaneously on a World Wide Web site managed by Microsoft (http://www.msnbc.com.). Viewers will be encouraged to refer to the site for further details and content of individual news storics. "Visionaries have said, 'Oh yes, some day the computer and the television screen will come together," commented Mark Harrington, the general manager of

MSNBC. "Well some day turns

A US news service linking NBC and Microsoft promises to fuse television and the Internet. David Usborne reports

TV takes step into cyberspace

after that, we'll invent one day and one story at a time." Executives have rushed to introduce the service in time to venture unveiled only seven catch a peak period of news in the United States, beginning with the Olympic Games, which the primacy of Ted Turner's open in Atlanta next weekend, and the final stretches of the presidential campaign, which culminates with the election itself in November. President Bill Clinton is to be tonight's inau-gural guest on Internight, an interview programme to be put out daily in evening prime time.

There will be nothing coy about MSNBC's determination to take on CNN, meanwhile. Several weeks ago, a giant billboard advertising the new venture was posted across the road from CNN's headquarters in Atlanta bearing the cheeky mes-sage: "The future of cable news from the people you know."

As its primary weapon, MSNBC has at its disposal not only NBC's 1,200-strong corps of journalists but also the network's most famous household names. Among these is NBC's veteran evening news reader, Tom Brokaw, who will conduct the interview with Mr Clinton. CNN, meanwhile, has the advantage a world-wide brand identity for delivering roundthe-clock news. Crucially, it also has a commanding presence on America's overcrowded cable distribution systems, with access to some 65 million US homes. To make way for the MSNBC, NBC is being forced to close down "America's Talking", an all-talk cable channel it launched two years ago. That service, however, has only made inroads into 16 million homes. Finding space on cable is also a critical challenge for

Fox. Rupert Murdoch recently offered cable operators $10 as a cash incentive for every viewer given access to his putative allnews service. It was that manocuvre that persuaded ABC to throw in the towel. Even more strikingly, Mr Murdoch also last month offered Telecommunications Inc (TCI), America's largest cable operator, a 10 per cent stake in his new service in return for a guarantee that it would be automatically offered to TCI customers.

A danger for MSNBC, meanwhile, is that its launch may be coming too soon for the interactive side to be fully developed. which could lead to disappointment for users of the web. Technology that would allow full video of the cable news service to be played on the web is barely available yet and critics point out that CNN aiready has several web sites of its own. NBC executives predict, none the less, that within a few years more people will be accessing MSNBC by computer than on out to be 15 July. What happens Microsoft's Bill Gates: challenging the supremacy of CNN their televisions.

Llo

tha of j ula

Genetically altered, the anti-smallpox virus vaccinia can fight many other diseases, writes Bernard Dixon

s smallpox vaccine due for a comeback? It may seem perverse to ask such a question in 1996. This is the 200th anniversary of Edward Jenner's successful vaccination of young James Phipps, which led to the widespread adoption of Jenner's method of preventing smallpox by infecting people with the related cowpox virus (vaccinia). Two centuries later. having eradicated smallpox using Jenner's technique, the World Health Organisation has announced that the two remaining laboratory stocks of the virus are to be destroyed.

With smallpox gone, there might seem to be little further use for vaccinia. But many other viruses continue to cause disease and death on a vast scale throughout the world. And one

Microbe[©] of the 🧷 🍵 🗬 Month "

means of combating them may be to use genetically altered

One expert who believes so is Enzo Paoletti. More than 10 years ago he discovered how to insert genes from other microbes into the DNA of vaccinia. In principle, if such an inserted gene normally produces a particular protein in the donor microbe, then it could do so in the cells of its new host too. And if that protein, in its original place, induced an infected animal to produce antibodies, the augmented vaccinia virus might do the same thing.

It worked. Scientists have since engineered several such "recombinant vaccines". One is a version of vaccinia designed to provoke immunity against rabies when taken by mouth. It has been distributed in several parts of Western Europe, injected into chicken heads left to be eaten by wild foxes, which can carry rabies. Many foxes took the bait and the disease is virtually extinct

Although such vaccines appear to be safe, scientists remain cautious about the prospects of using similar ones in humans, or in animals in contact with humans. First, the procedure is not trouble-free. At the injection site, vaccinia can cause unpleasant reactions, which are likely to be severe in individuals whose immune systerns are impaired - by Aids, for example, or by drugs given to pre-vent the rejection of transplanted organs. Second, it is theoretically possible that a genetically altered vaccinia virus could pass from humans to wildlife, or interact with related viruses, with uncertain consequences.

Paoletti believes that an alternative approach may prove more acceptable and equally effective: to use viruses that have the advantages of the first generation of recombinant vaccines, but none of their disadvantages. Several are being developed which have virtually no side-effects, provoke immunity and, like con-ventional vaccinia, are live; they do not reproduce (or do so poorty) in recipients' cells and so cannot spread to other animals.

As a basis for one range of vaccines, Paoletti and colleagues have removed several regions of DNA from vaccinia that it require to multiply harmfully. Known as NYVAC, the resulting virus retains the capacity to grow normally in chick embryo cells, yet can scarcely grow at all in human and other animal cells. NYVAC does not produce inflammation at the injection site, and has negligible ill-effects, even in mice whose immune systems have been compromised. When researchers incorporated into NYVAC relevant genes taken from Japanese encephalitis virus and equine influenza virus, the resulting vaccines protected pigs and horses respectively against these infections. Another strategy, pioneered by the Virogenetics Corporation, focuses on vaccinia-related viruses that normally infect birds. These too can be genetically altered so that they immunise various mammals against other microbes, even though the viruses do not multiply in mammalian cells. A modified canarypox virus, for example, has protected dogs and cats experimentally against rabies.

A recently recognised use for recombinant poxviruses is in cancer treatment. Many types of tumour cell have on their surface antigens - proteins characteristic of those tumours - which can induce the body to make antibodies. Unfortunately, the response of the immune system to such antigens is normally weak or non-existent. However, a poxvirus carrying not only a tumour antigen but also a cytokine (a natural substance that heightens the immune response) might provoke the production of sufficient antibody to attack a figure (8) Yield from a bank, in-

ACROSS

Fight river cramp, audi-

well-turned creation (6)

11 It's early days for the Op. 24 Propose having home

12 Brief's up in the air, per- 25 Pressed seaman within cluding francs (6)

10 Chant read from staff.

position (8)

Well-intentioned Vatican inoculation during the epidemic of 1902. Now the virus exists only in the Photograph:

Protection by detection

n the past 12 months, British schools have seemed less safe than ever before. First, the fatal stabbing of the headteacher Philip Lawrence while trying to help a pupil; then the horrific massacre at Dunblane; now a machete attack at an infants' school. How can we make our schools the haven for children that they ought to be?

from the US - by a clever updating of radar. Compared with the UK, American schools face far big-ger problems. The routine carrying of weapons - knives and. worryingly, guns - is far more prevalent. The figures are staggering. According to statistics from the US Bureau of Justice. more than half of violent crimes against teenagers occur in school buildings, on school property or on streets near a school. An estimated 100,000 students carry a gun to school, and gunshots cause one in four deaths among American teenagers

The carrying of weapons by children for self-protection has reached such epidemic pro-portions that many American schools have installed metal detectors at all entrances. But as we all know from our experience at airports, conventional metal detectors get it wrong a lot of the time - causing delays and frayed tempers - and only work at very short range. With more than 120,000 school buildings in the US, and an average of eight entrances per building, the search is on for a better system - one that is accurate, cost-effective and non-intrusive. Now, an American company

17 Crazy Cockney's away for Slight is withdrawn (6)

Like many beds for all needing treatment (6)

a time (8)

A new kind of radar may solve the problem of lethal weapons in our schools. Tony Newton reports detect concealed weapons from several metres away, but also to tell what sort of weapon it is. And the subjects will not even know they are being scanned.

Part of the solution may come The device, known as the Concealed Weapons Detection System, is being devel-oped by The MacAleese Industries Inc, of New Mexico, and has been tested on the nearby Radar Range at the Sandia National Laboratories. It is based on a short-range version of radar.

First, a transmitter beams a pulse of radio energy at the subiect. Most of the radio energy passes straight through the body, but a metallic object such as a knife or a gun - will reflect or scatter some of the energy, which is then picked up by a receiver mounted in the same unit as the transmitter.

So far, this is not very different from the way in which the radar at an airport detects the presence of planes in the sky above it. But the clever part of this new device is the incorporation of software programmed to recognise the characteristic energy scatter patterns - the "signature" - for a wide variety of weapons, such as knife blades, derringers or larger-calibre pistols, and which can discriminate between a weapon and other common metallic objects such as belt buckles, coins or jewellery. Controlled lab testing has produced a 99.2 per cent suc-

is experimenting with a device cess rate for discriminating that will be able not only to between weapons and innowhile sending an alarm (either if the device works but is too audible or discreet) to security cent objects - far higher than conventional metal detectors, says the company. For any building where security is important, the designers envisage a system comprising a complex but hidden array of antennae to properson carrying a concealed weapon approached the door, the system would detect it and automatically engage an elec-tronic lock to keep them out.

personnel.

Schools are not the only ones that could benefit from this system. Banks and airports would be prime candidates. Taxi drivers could be protected too now that attacks by passengers are increasingly common, if vide total coverage of the not commonplace. A concealed approach to the door. When a weapons system designed to weapons system designed to cover the back doors could warn the driver and automatically lock the door before the passenger got in.

The crucial question is cost:

expensive, then cash-pressed British schools will never be able to afford to install it, and it will be only those organisations that can already afford to spend heavily on security that will use it. On this front, the news is equivocal. "Our goal is to manufacture these devices for less than $3,000 per unit", said a spokesman for The MacAleese Industries. However, volume or a government contract - might pull the figure down.

The company is also developing lightweight, hand-held versions of the device for police or military use in the US. For the police officer, a device with a range of 5m to 15m would allow the unobtrusive scanning of a suspect for concealed weapons before trying to make an arrest: this would lessen the risk to the arresting officer and reduce the likelihood of shooting an unarmed suspect. Such a device could also be used to scan large numbers of people arriving at or leaving an event. For the military, a more pow-erful backpack or vehicle mounted unit would allow long-range surveillance - up to 400m - and could be used to detect suipers or possible

Have a heart.

What does the Heart of Britain mean to you? Send in your photographs, now, and they could live forever as one of 300 chosen by our celebrity judges to appear in the "Heart of Britain" book.

There are nine chapters in the book, which might give you some ideas:

Young Britain, Caring Britain, Animal Britain, Britain on the Move, Sporting Britain, Good Time Britain, Beautiful Britain, Working Britain and Tomorrow's Britain.

The picture judged best in each category wins an Olympus Mju-1 compact camera.

Send us your three best photographs, together with a £2 donation and entry form available from BP garages, Dillons, Dixons, John Menzies, WHSmith, Waterstone's, Mirror Group Newspapers or by telephoning 0891 252605.*

The "Heart of Britain" book will be a remarkable record of the nation in the final years of the 20th century, and your photograph and name could be there for all to see.

Send a picture Now!

In support of Royal Brompton Hospital, the leading edge in heart research and treatment.

Supported by AMV Group, Bookman Projects, Dixons, Halifax Building Society, Heart 106.2, Hilisdown Holdings, London Kensington Hilton, Love this Records, Marks and Spancer, Next "Cabs will last less than one minute and are charged at 39p/min cheap rate, 49p/min at all other times. All profits min be donated to Heart of Britain Appeal Lines close titin huly 1996.

Of ublished by Newspaper Publishing PLC | Canada Square, Curary Wharf, London E145DL, and printed at Mirror Culour Print. St Albars Road, Wastord Hack issues available from H.

Menday 15 July 1996 Represented as a new paper with the Pera Office. Hack extest available from Historic Newspapers (#60) 906 mill to the Post Office

22 Jerks round first of shoe 21 Left craft, capsizing clip-

14 Publication risk, by the 18 What many get up to

23 This rat's from a hunting looked sullen (8)

ship, without question (8)

buckles (6) nurse (6)

way, she's entered into

